DRESS by Anne Rittenhouse

New York.—We expect the one-piece frock at the first outbreak of spring. It is a fashion which has recurred through several generations. But today it has a rival. This is the separate skirt to which are attached several blouses, according to inclination, the temperature of the day, and the occasion.

It is not only economy which sponsors the exact kind of costume that is made up of two pieces; it is also comfort and pleasure. The coat and skirt do not satisfy the need for spring costume, nor do they give the kind of pleasure that one gets from the separate skirt with its infinite variety of blouses.

After fashion decreed that the coat was not to be removed in public, there was not so much enthusiasm for it. It is a necessary garment in the wardrobe, that is true, and it is rarely left out of the fashions of any season, but it does not offer to anyone who wears it the exact kind of comfort that comes from the thin blouse which drops over the hips, and the separate skirt which may be long and formal, short and informal, of rough material for weather, or of soft material for the house.

Only a strict adherence to the laws of safety in dress causes women to buy a one-piece costume or a coat and skirt. The American tailored suit was the result of the newly established law of fashion that women should keep to one costume and not vary it with odds and ends, with flotsam and jetsam.

Honestly speaking, all human nature cries aloud for variety. Women would like to dress differently each day; if they had the time and the purse; but the onrush of activities, the terrific speed of the whirligig of modern life, have compelled them to adapt their desires to their needs, and they do not find time to change the costume, or to vary it in color or combination. Out of these conditions grew the idea that to be well dressed one must leave a costume as it was in the beginning.

Now, today, we are restless when we are compelled to follow this decision. We want separate blouses for our suits; we want to change our type of collar from week to week; we like different hats with our suits. We are willing to allow an evening gown to remain as it is because we realize that it is difficult to trifle with it and come off successful.

When we cried incessantly for something that would give us variety, the dressmaker introduced the short tunic-blouse and the separate skirt. This, they said to the women, will give you all the change for change that your souls desire. Combine the garments in a dozen different ways and believe Sweet Williams grow readily from cuttings. They run out in two or three years and should be renewed. Madame Caroline Testout is the official Portland rose; it is one of the most satisfactory roses that can be grown by the amateur.

Egg plant is difficult to grow in Portland; the amateur had best let it alone. Our summers are not hot enough for it to develop well. Seeds may be protected against insects and birds by slightly moistening them and then stirring in red lead until they are well coated; be sure to allow them to dry before planting.

An old rule for determining corn planting time is, that when the first early apple blossoms are dropping, or the leaves on the oak trees are the size of a squirrel's ear, the danger of frost is over. Lima beans are a risky crop in Portland; some years they mature, other times the first fall rains catch them before they are ripe. There are some pole limas which are acclimated here; they mature earlier than Eastern grown seed.

E. Van Duser, M. V. Fuller, E. T. Allen, George H. Cecil, F. A. Elliott and Lieutenant Colonel C. S. Chapman. John T. Douglall will be toastmaster. H. C. Clair is chairman of the committee arranging for the affair.

half dozen blouses to one skirt, or they order three skirts and a dozen blouses and call the outfit their spring wardrobe. They do not bother their heads about any other kind of costume. It is the simple life. The sketch shows how Jenny, of Paris, combines a tunic-blouse and a plain skirt. The former is of coral crepe de chine—no dimming of color there. It is trimmed with biscuit-colored taffeta ribbon in a curious way, for a necklace of the ribbon shows against the bare flesh and drops down to the waist. It is trimmed with coral buttons. The girde, which is of the ribbon, is trimmed with coral ribbon embroidered in gold threads.

The skirt is of beige-colored cloth. It is also copied in Chinese Shantung.

BRIGHT COLORED BLOUSES Once upon a time, we thought it was breaking the laws of artistic dressing to wear a bright colored blouse with a somber skirt. Now we revel in the combination. The brighter the better, we say. The woman of fashion chooses a serviceable blouse for a rainy day, a brilliant one for a luncheon, a transparent one for the theatre or dinner at home. Women who plan their wardrobes with care and precision order a

The Adventures of Betsy Coon

Betsy Otter is Lost It was a beautiful sight to see Dick Otter and Miss Betsy glide through the clear waters of Big Brook as they swam with powerful strokes for Betsy Otter's home. You see, both wanted to show off their speed and skill as swimmers and divers. And I want to tell you that you never saw more fancy diving stunts in swimming and diving in your life.

And Dick Otter said, "Betsy, please show me how you did that. And when you crawl stroke with your face in the water, and how in the world you do that hand-over-hand stroke so fast." But Betsy Otter never spoke a word, but just gave a sudden burst of speed and far outdistanced the powerful swimmer, Dick Otter.

And Dick said to Betsy, when he caught up with her, "Betsy, you're the best girl diver and swimmer I ever saw in my life, and I shall be the proudest Otter in the world when I take you to Mirror Pond, and show you off to my family and all our friends."

And Betsy said, in the most teasing way, "Dick Otter, don't be too sure of yourself, for I haven't said yet that I would go with you to Mirror Pond. I don't know you very well yet. I don't know yet what kind of a temper you have, and whether you are cheerful, and patient, and brave, to live with, and I don't know whether you are too lazy to be a good fisherman, and to build me a good home."

And then you would have laughed, to have seen poor Dick's sad face; and to have heard him make Betsy all kinds of promises; and I'm sorry to say, Dick pleased himself wonderfully, and you would have thought he was the most remarkable Otter in all the world, if you could have heard him talk. You see, Dick had been talking for hours, and had not been asked for much. He had
