The Adventures of Jimmy Coon

Dick Otter Visits Betsy Otter's Home BEFORE the sun glided the Big Pond with shining gold, the next morning, Betsy and her big brother were swimming around the Big Pond, and calling for Dick Otter.

At last behind a little wooded island, he found the lost Betsy and her big brother, diving for big salmon trout. Each had caught a handsome patterned fish; and when Dick Otter swam to them, Betsy exclaimed, "Dick Otter, let me introduce you to my big brother," and both shook hands in a very friendly manner, as they floated in the crystal blue water.

Betsy's big brother said at once, "Dick Otter, we've heard all about you, and father and mother want you to come at once for breakfast; and we have some fine fish for our morning meal." And the three swimmers started for the fish breakfast, faster than a big trout, or pickerel, could swim.

THE PRESS by Anne Reiffenhouse

NEW YORK.—Has ancient Palestine been the inspiration for much of the modern costume? The French, you know, have paid far more attention than we to the supreme struggle and ultimate victory of General Allenby. They have followed his trip across the desert into Jerusalem with the dramatic fervor that belongs to the French.

The French, close at hand, began to study ancient Palestine, and they studied it from the days of King David and the glories of that court. They are proud of these pages of life much that is splendid in the costume that we get today.

They brought henna into fashion from the East; they reinstated turquoise, masses of gold, chains of bullion, the uncovered shoulders and arms, and the ornamentation of the hair.

So, when you see the splendid new evening gowns in henna, turquoise and gold, with great chains of bullion entwining the hips and tassels of turquoise hanging to the ankles, you may let your mind flicker back to the ancient history of Jewry and remember with a thrill what one British general did to recover that land from the infidel.

There is a gown worn this season in America which could have been worn in the presence of King David. It is sketched today.

It is of henna and gold brocade, soft and airy, trimmed with large turquoise beads arranged in an embroidery design. There is a narrow edge of turquoise satin ribbon than runs along the embroidery. A heavy gold chain goes about the waist and drops to the bottom of the skirt with a ball of blue turquoise at the end. There is a buckle of turquoise on the belt. The shoulders, back and arms are entirely bare. The slippers are of gold, and the stockings of turquoise.

Sumptuous Eastern evening frock of supple brocade, in henna and gold trimmed with large turquoise beads and turquoise ribbon. Heavy gold chain is the girdle, with turquoise buckle and tassel.

Although we in America do not approve of metallic brocade for summer, which is a part and parcel of the renaissance of ancient splendor, it is best to be warned beforehand that the importers feel that a brocade season is to come upon us next October. It is pronounced by Paris that the fabric can never become cheaply popular, for the reason that the demand exceeds the supply.

It is said that the French factories are not able to turn out a sufficient quantity of these sumptuous brocades to supply the orders of the Paris dressmakers. If this is so, the woman who likes brocade had better buy it now.

150 Call Easter Monday at the Mann Home

First M. E. Church Women in Charge of Reception Which Proves Delightful Affair.

THE annual Easter tea at the Mann Home for Old People, held Monday, was a large and very delightful affair, more than 150 people calling during the afternoon. As has been the custom for many years a woman's church organization was in charge, this year the church being the First M. E. Receiving and the vice president, Mrs. Fred Strong, was Mrs. A. King Wilson, president of the Ladies' Aid society of the First M. E. church.

A musical program of unusual merit was given by Mrs. Fletcher Linn, soprano, and Miss Winifred Forbes, violinist, with Miss Margaret Mackenzie at the piano. The 40 or more elderly people, both men and women, who enjoy the hospitality of the home, were delighted with the program.

Probable Changes
