It was a pretty sight to see breakfast. Betsy gave a sudden scream, Dick and Betsy Otter swimming side by "Oh, Dick, save me! It is the awful side along the moonlit waters of the Big River. And then they swam rapidly cautiously along laughing brooks, and singing little rivulets, where the tall grasses reached across and touched hands, so that the swimmers passed under green bowers and flowering arches of fragrant wild flowers.

After swimming through many ponds and winding brooks, they came out to a big river. Now and then they heard a great Horned Owl hoot in the Great Wood; and often they heard the call of some of the little people of the woodland. Some Loons were fishing on the Big River; and they heard them laughing loudly, as their harsh voices echoed through the green chambers of the for-

Soon Dick heard the sound of the waterfall, and he said, "Betsy, here is where we get out of the Big River, and must walk around the falls."

And both swam to the shore, and cautiously climbed the moss-carpeted bank to walk around the falls. They both used their keen noses and ears eyes, to watch out for cunning te-tains Young Men Home From the Front.

Honor Guests At Banquet

By Vella Winner DELIGHTFUL hospitality was ex-tended Saturday evening by the Woodstock Parent-Teacher association, when the Woodstock boys who have been discharged from service were honor guests at a banquet served in the gymnasium. Covers were placed for 100 and a delicious meal was served, the teachers of the school acting as waitresses. The menu included many home prepared goodles which were much appreciated by the guests. The tables were beautifully decorated in lilacs, jonquils and ferns and presented a very attractive appearance. Much credit for the entire affair is due the president, Mrs. D. B. Kelly, who had the able assistance of a large corps of assistants.

Following the banquet the company was called to order by the principal of the school, A. J. Perdeaux, who introduced as the first speaker Dr. J. Francis Drake, a member of the board of education, a prominent factor in securing for the Woodstock district its present fine new building, which has, however, already been outgrown, it being necessary to use two rooms in the old building. Dr. Drake paid ashigh tribute to the boys of Woodstock who so readily gave their services to their country. Miss Kathleen Mount sang two beautiful solos. The response was given by Dr. (Lieutenant) Blachley, who gave a list of the Woodstock boys who have made the supreme sacrifice, and then read a letter from Stafford Jennings, telling of the tragic death of his father and his own narrow escape from starvation. A letter was also read from the captain influenza, in which the highest commendation was laid to the sergeant. A number of additional guests came in for the remainder of the evening,

The annual banquet and election of officers of the women's auxiliary of the Chamber of Commerce of Eugene was held Wednesday night in the chamber rooms. The banquet was attended by 74 women and was a decided success. Mrs. Otto Gilstrap was chosen president Mrs. F. L. Poindexter, vice president Mrs. R. H. Fields, secretary; Mrs. Dar win E. Yoran, treasurer, and Mrs. Fred Chess, corresponding secretary.

Revival of Thin Capes However, most of us have a strong belief that if those thin, handsome brilliant capes of a decade ago had been kept on the shelf, it would be possible to put them on today without alteration. The new ones and the old ones are as tonishingly alike. They are not intended for protection, although they give a sufficient amount on a mild day. Of course, there are women who spend their time retrieving clothes. They go twice a year and bring out all that was saved from the wreckage of the season before. They struggle with it, putting new wine into old bottles, as it were, and usually make a complete failure of the job. It is a difficult thing to convince the mass of women that it takes more money and vitality to make over an old garment into something fashionable than to buy a new bit of material and fashion it into a simple frock that Gardening is one of the best horemedies for bad cases of nerves.

Plant the rows running north and south: thus the sun reaches the plants longer.

Many Portland gardeners will save enough on vegetables this season to buy

. In spraying roses and other plants, spray the under side of the leaves As well as the upper side.

Do not hurry about transplanting the pepper plants; the cold nights of early spring check the growth.

Do not fail to raise a bed of petunias this season. Pride of Portland is a splendid variety. It originated here.

Break the monotony of the apartment house or flat with a window box or two. Properly planted and tended, they are a joy all summer long.

Be sure to harden off the seedlings before transplanting them in the open ground. Carry the boxes outdoors in the morning and bring them in at night Clean out the strawberry bed, cutting out all the plants and runners except those in the rows. Keep the weeds and grass down by frequent cultivation through the spring and summer.
