

364TH INFANTRY
IN ARGONNE NINE
DAYS AND NIGHTS

Regiment Holds Record for Continuous Fighting, According to Major Fred W. Rase.

USUAL TIME THREE DAYS

Near Ypres When Armistice Was Signed; Would Have Been in Germany in Two Weeks.

The 364th infantry of the 91st division spent nine days and nights in a stretch in the Argonne battle, the first time any division was kept in battle for so long a time, according to Major Fred W. Rase, who spent Tuesday in Portland on his way to Seattle to visit with his family for the first time since his enlistment.

Major Rase is on a 15-day leave of absence, at the end of which he will go to Camp Lewis for his discharge before returning to Portland with his family.

The usual time for keeping men in battle was three days, according to Major Rase, but after the nine days of Argonne fighting, instead of having a rest, the men were sent on with the 27th division to Belgium where they participated in the battles of Lys and Scheldt near Ypres. The company was here when the armistice was signed, but in two weeks more would have been on German soil, according to Major Rase.

CAPTURED ANDENARDE
While in Belgium they captured Andenarde from the Germans, a town 1000 years old which had been captured in 12 different battles during its history. The Scheldt river is known as the "river of blood" because so many battles have been fought on its shores, the contours of which are excellent for military purposes.

"The Germans did not realize the American army was as strong," said Major Rase. "We fought against the Prussian Guards and captured only 2400 prisoners; the rest of them were dead or wounded, since they had been told they would be killed by the Americans if they were captured. This I was told by a German officer."

GERMANS ARROGANT
German officers were extremely arrogant, according to Major Rase. On one instance an officer sent for Major Rase. "I am a German officer," he declared indignantly, "and you realize that you have caged enlisted men in with me."

"Well, I have never heard any complaints from the enlisted men," was the major's reply to the officer's remark.

Nearly every man of the 364th was gassed, according to Major Rase. The gas was sent over in high explosive shells, in too small amounts to control the wearing of gas masks which interfered with fighting, but enough to make the men sick at night. Major Rase coughed for three months after the Argonne engagement, as a result of inhaling gas.

IN THREE CAMPAIGNS
Major Rase is a forest examiner in District Forester's office and upon his discharge will resume his pre-war occupation in the department of lands. He is an experienced army officer, having had service in the Spanish-American war and in the Philippine insurrection.

Upon the outbreak of the European war he attended the first officers' training camp, at the Presidio, although he already had his commission as captain, and during the second training camp he acted as instructor. He later served as instructor at Camp Lewis, and went overseas with the 91st division. While in France he was promoted to a major.

New Candy Store,
The Highway, Opens
On Washington St.

Operating its own candy factory, manufacturing its own ice cream and running its own dairy farm, The Highway, a new confectionery and ice cream store at 307 Washington street, between Fifth and Sixth, was opened to the public this week.

Lloyd Jones, long experienced in the manufacture of candies and ice cream, is manager of the Columbia Highway Confectionery company, which operates the store. "We are making every endeavor to serve the public with the best," says Mr. Jones, "and we have secured an up-to-date dairy farm for our butter, eggs and cream. We have founded our own factory for making high-grade candies and ice cream. Within a few days we will begin serving light lunches.

Furnishings in The Highway are different from the average place of its kind. Reed furniture of Oregon manufacture has been used, and attractive alloys have been constructed.

The factory is located on the east side, near Williams avenue and Beech street. A long lease has been secured on the Washington street location, and the patronage for the first opening days has far exceeded anticipation.
