Orpheum Show, With Much Music and Mirth, Has Snappy Rollicking Bill.

By S. R., Jr. WE'LL tell the world that it's a regu-lar Orpheum show they're turning out across the street this week, and that Lucille Cavanagh is a regular, six-cylinder headliner hitting on all six all the ne. With Miss Cavanagh, who works in snappy style and snappy wardrobe in a snappy setting, are a trio of snappy boys, to-wit: Wheeler Wadsworth, Mel Craig and William B. Taylor. They play Miss Comment and a violin and dance. Cavanagh pays particular attention to the artistic appeal of her setting and wardrobe, and, we must say, puts it over with a bang. Miss Cavanagh and her company were heartily received by opening audiences yesterday. Another sweet bit of a singer is Mirian Wills, who with Jack Clifford, a versatile sort of a fellow, puts on a happy, rural railroad station sketch, entitled, "At Jasper Junction." Then Mr. Clifford does a "snow snuffing" act, and though we do not approve of this sort of thing on the stage, particularly in view of the ning of July 1, Clifford makes an effective scene of it.

Then Homer B. Mason, Marguerite Keeler and George E. Romain interpret delightfully a travesty on the eternal triangle thing. It is a laugh sketch with a little moral for a chaser. It is especially well done. sie Browning, with Albert Vernon at the piano, is "back again" in character songs. One of her best things is an imitation of Eddie Foy. Clark and Verdi were welcomed back by Portland fans, who like them as much as ever-the Italian and the heart of the Adirondacks. Accompany-

A real novelty and a pretty one is the sand picture work of Jules LeRue and Jean Dupre, who close the bill, next to the travel weekly. Harry and Emmie Larned open with a novelty wheel-riding exhibition

Gets Frequent

Applause

DRAMA teeming in every line, "The Greater Price," headline attraction at the Hippodrome this week, drew almost constant applause for the splendid interpretations of Virginia Thornton and Charles King, the two actors in the playlet. It represents a struggle between man's tender instincts and his crude desire for wealth, in which his finer instincts win with the aid of the woman. Joe Shriner and Lew Herman stirred the audience to repeated rounds of applause by their clever songs and dialogues which came to a climax in their song hit, "The Worst Is Yet to Come." Howard, Moore and Copper in some vocal selections, were good. Austin and Russel give character studies and the four Pierrots have a gymnastic act.

'Great Divide' Is Welcomed Back

Old Friend of Portland Theatre Goers, Enthusiastically Received on Reappearance.

THE appeal of the new and untried ways of life wins in conflict with the habit of traditional convention in "The Great Divide," playing at the Baker theatre this week. The scenes are laid in the mountain country of Arizona and the romantic tale involved is weird and wild in keeping with the en-

Ruth Jordan is left alone in her brother's cabin in a lonely spot far removed from any other habitation and while thus helpless and alone is accosted by three drunken men. She bargains with the least loathsome of the trio for protection from the others, promising to marry him as a reward for this service. The marriage is at the beginning a loveless affair so far as Ruth is concerned. but eventually she finds many excellent qualities of mind and heart beneath her husband's rough exterior and they go happily on their way as married folk should.

Olive Templeton takes the part of Ruth Jordan; Stephen Ghent, the husband, is portrayed by Albert McGovern; Lee Miller is Philip Jordan, brother of Ruth and Verna Felton takes the part of Polly Jordan, who furnishes enough humor to save the audience from heartsickness through the sorrowful tale. Anna Mc-Naughton appears to excellent advantage as a dear sweet-faced little lady, the mother of the Jordans.

"The Great Divide" is an old friend to Portland theatre goers and they welcomed its appearance with enthusiasm at the initial performance Sunday night.
