DRESS By Annie Rittenhouse

NEW YORK—There is a new kind of blouse projected into fashion. The conservatives it looks rather sketchy; to the extremists it is adorable.

It is supposed to be an American creation. It comes out with a swirl of full skirts, elbow sleeves, tip-lifted hats, that return to early Victorianism which gives the public a thrilling chance to sit up and briskly gossip.

In the twinkling of an eye our women were swilling from the best or the worst of Byzantine to the most coquettish and demure of early Victorian and with that marvelous adaptability which we frequently assert and never understand, our chameleon-like young women turned the expression of their faces and the posture of their figures over night into something new and different.

How do they do it? If some psychologist would devote his time to the study of this really amazing quality in American womanhood, it would be an interesting reading. We know how the French do it. They draw on all the connective tissue offers to give their faces the various expressions that their gown demand.

The French have always been amused at the American lack of artistry, as they call it, in wearing different costumes with the same face, as it were; but to the observer, it seems as though the American woman were by far the greater artist. They do not attempt to supply expression through cosmetics; they make nature do it for them, and they adapt themselves to the new fashion in figure, coiffure, expression and posture.

This bit of discussion is really not sidetracking from the main subject, which is that our women dipped into early Victorianism easily and smoothly. They found it no trouble, and they look astonishingly well while making the Victorian gestures. They wear balloon skirts of taffeta that stand out, below the knees in wide dimensions, and this curious, new bodice which is taken from the Victorian shawl and is quite clever as a bit of creative work.

It gives the effect of that wide, outstanding line around the shoulders, which was attempted by the French dressmakers in the spring of 1914 and then became quite common in the following autumn. It is peculiarly graceful with the tip-lifted hat as flat as a saucerpan, trimmed with a wreath of large roses and the floating ribbons which have always been associated with "Follow me, young man."

The sketch shows one of the best of these Victorian gowns, just as the girl looked when wearing it. The material is taffeta, stiff enough to stand out without crinolines at the knees and around the neck. The full upper skirt is tucked under and caught to a tight ankle band, and this touch is not Victorian. The bodice begins with a bra-siere of chiffon and lace which has elbow sleeves of the taffeta finished with immense puffs that are pulled out as far as the material permits. Over the bra-siere goes a bodice that is made from one extremely wide band of the taffeta. This band is made more attractively when lined with a contrasting color in the same material. It goes across the shoulders and back, and stands out in a straight line from the neck, crosses over the bust, wraps around the back, and ties in a bow at one side.

The last is of natural colored straw with immense pink roses. The trim is lined with black velvet, and the streamers are of velvet ribbon.

Mrs. R. M. Tuttle was hostess for a delightful tea at her attractive home on Mount Tabor on Saturday afternoon. A feature of the afternoon was the reading of extracts from the letters of Mrs. Tuttle's daughter, Miss Ada Alice Tuttle, who is in service overseas as a Y. M. C. entertainer and who is serving in the army of occupation, stationed at Coblenz. Following the reading of the letters by Mrs. Tuttle tea was served. The table was set in spring blossoms. Mrs. Charles Edwin Sears and Mrs. J. C. Elliott King, who presided at the tea, were assisted by the Misses Edith Dowling and Carolyn McEwan. Mrs. Tuttle was again hostess for a delightful tea in the east garden on Sunday. More than 100 guests called during the afternoon and the program of the day before was repeated. Presiding at the tea, which was held in the garden, were Mrs. George H. Marsh and Mrs. Farman who was in England at the time of the breaking out of the war.

Mrs. F. C. Bryant was hostess for a delightful thrift stamp tea and bridge party at her home on East Broadway on Saturday afternoon. Six tables were placed for bridge and about 10 additional guests called at the tea hour. Spring blossoms were used throughout the rooms and a substantial sum was added to the quota of the Portland Women's club for the benefit of the Women's building at the University of Oregon. Assisting Mrs. Bryant for the afternoon were Mrs. C. H. Wheeler and Mrs. F. C. Whitten.

Peter A. Porter circle, Ladies of the G. A. R., will entertain with an afternoon card party on Wednesday evening in Baker hall on Killingsworth avenue and Albina.

The Loyola club, which has just been organized, will give its initial dancing party this evening at Multnomah hotel. Miss Ann McMahon is in charge of arrangements and president of the club.

Mrs. A. R. Porter and Miss Margaret Porter, who have been spending the winter months in Los Angeles, have returned to Portland.

The clubhouse of the Oregon State Motor association will be the scene of a dancing party on Saturday evening. Reservations for the buffet supper, which is served following the dancing, are being made at the club, and a delightful evening is anticipated.

Mrs. Jasper G. Stevens and son, Will, and Miss Jean Stevens arrived Sunday in Portland from California where they have been spending the past few weeks.

Kappa Alpha Theta alumnae will meet at the home of Mrs. Mark Matthiessen on Wednesday afternoon at 7:45 o'clock at apartment 3, Forham apartments. All Theta are urged to be present.

Laurelhurst club will give its regular dancing party at Christensen's hall on Thursday evening for members only.
