

G. O. P. SOLONS TO PURSUE POLICY OF WATCHFUL WAITING

Republican Senators Will Mark Time While Waiting for Official Peace Text and Message.

MANY SEPARATE DOCUMENTS

Hope to Find a Way by Which Treaty Can Be Considered Apart From League Pact.

By J. Bart Campbell.
Washington, May 9.—(L. N. S.)—Senator Borah, progressive Republican of Idaho, served unmistakable notice upon the Republican leaders of the senate today that he would bolt the Republican party unless it lined up in out-and-out opposition to the United States' entering the proposed League of Nations. Borah declared that he did not approve of any decision that Senators Lodge, Penrose, Smoot and Curtis and other Republican leaders might have arrived at regarding the situation which might result in any further delay in establishing before the American people the exact attitude of the Republican party relative to the modified League covenant.

Washington, May 9.—(L. N. S.)—While awaiting the official text of the peace treaty and the special message President Wilson is sending congress with regard to the international situation revolving around the voluminous document, Republican leaders of the senate will pursue the historic Wilsonian policy of "watchful waiting."

This was determined upon today at a conference between leading Republican senators like Lodge of Massachusetts, Penrose of Pennsylvania, Smoot of Utah, and Curtis of Kansas.

While no official announcement was forthcoming as a result of the conference it was ascertained from an authoritative source that the mooted question of whether the modified League of Nations covenant can be considered separately from the rest of the peace treaty—a procedure which some Republican senators strongly favor—should be left open until the official text can be properly studied.

It was explained that such a course was the natural and logical one to pursue for even those Republican senators who desire to put the covenant aside until other provisions of the peace treaty are disposed of.

WOULD TEST CHALLENGE
Senator Lodge, who is to be chairman of the senate foreign relations committee as well as the Republican floor leader of the senate, was said to be among those Republican senators who wish, if possible, to test the administration challenge, as voiced by Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska and other Democratic leaders, that opponents of the modified League of Nations covenant would find it difficult to take the league out of the treaty.

Republican senators like Moses of New Hampshire believe that a way can be found to do so, but it was declared Senator Lodge, Penrose, Smoot and Curtis, for example, were agreed that nothing could better be accomplished toward that end until the treaty's exact text was carefully gone into. Once that huge task was out of the way, some definite plan could be formulated whereby the league covenant could be considered separately, although only in the event that it was found to be not inextricably interwoven with the treaty proper, it was stated.

"But how are we to know whether we can separate the league covenant from the rest of the treaty until we have seen the official text of the entire document?" was the pointed question asked by one senator who participated in the Republican conference. His inquiry was reflected by the attitude of his colleagues.

BUSY WITH ORGANIZATION
And it can be stated authoritatively that their attitude is one that is likely to stand until the senate foreign relations committee returns, following the convening of congress, May 19, has received the official text of the treaty and has begun to frame the resolution of ratification by which the senate is finally to dispose of the momentous document.

In the meanwhile Senator Lodge, Senator Penrose and other leaders of the slim Republican majority in the senate, were busily engaged on organization plans by which it is expected they will control next week's Republican senatorial caucus.

Senator Penrose was in conference Thursday night with a group of his friends, immediately following his return to Washington. He was "back on the job" at the capitol today for the first time since his departure after the adjournment of the last congress.
