Women's Dress by Anne Rittenhouse speaks of the prevailing shades of green and yellow, they are called jade and citron.

With us, even after our brief adventure in France, the colors are called apple green and lemon yellow.

There are women who shrink at the thought of yellow or bright green coming near their skin; but the dressmaker assures them that this need not be.

Only those with faultless facial coloration can bring either of these shades to the neck. When that is possible, the very daring of it creates unlimited attention and makes for success.

But only the gifted run the risk of making themselves hideous. The majority of women who accept lemon yellow or apple green spend their time in seeing to it that the colors are placed well out of harm's way.

No one can do wrong with even the most dangerous color if it isn't permitted to come near the face. This seems a simple creed. No woman should find reason to feel that it is difficult.

The dressmakers manipulate these two colors very well in combination with white, cream and black.

There is no danger in those juxtapositions. Lemon yellow goes with white better than with black, while apple green goes with both.

It is always a happy moment in the life of the conservative woman when black lace comes back into the limelight of fashion.

It solves puzzling problems. It stands for economy. It is delicate. One can wear it throughout a season and look well without creating talk.

The entire world is divided into these two groups of women. It is the majority, therefore, who like the black lace frock with its brilliant sash, although the minority also accept it as part of their wardrobe.

The black lace gown in the sketch might be called a compromise between that which is demure and that which is brilliant. It has enough of both qualities to give it the vote from most women.

The lace of which it is made is very

Woman Tells of Misery in France

Red Cross Worker Gives Graphic Recital Detailing Need for Continued Effort.

THE story of the starved and diseased refugees always extremely old and feeble or too young to help themselves, for the Germans invariably kept all who were able to work, was recounted in a most graphic manner Thursday evening at an informal meeting held at the home of Mrs. Helen Ekin Starrett, by Dr. Bertha Stuart Dymont, who recently returned from long continued service with the Red Cross in France.

Dr. Dymont's work was primarily among children and her stories of their dirty, emaciated, diseased bodies, caused primarily by malnutrition, were gripping in their interest.

The Adventures of Jimmy Coon

Cousin Bruin's Escape COUSIN BRUIN and Jimmy Coon who had been sleeping soundly on the bed of leaves were aroused by the thick smoke.

That smart and cunning Jimmy Coon always had some new trick up his sleeve. He poked through the hole by his coat tails.

Jimmy Coon slipped through the opening with great ease. Then those three little friends began to claw and scratch to make a hole big enough for Cousin Bruin to slip through.
