Water is the cheapest beverage, tea next.

"Why, how can that be? A pound of tea costs—"

Excuse us for interrupting you, but the way to count the cost of tea is not by the pound, but by the cup. A cup of fine strengthening invigorating delicious tea costs only 1/3 cent per cup, because a pound makes so many cups.

Schilling Tea is the fine practical economical tea of this country.

THE really delightful part about millinery is that you may wear what you please, if you have the daring to carry it off.

The milliners do not limit the fashion, but if they did we would be a race of ugly women.

There are still women who go into a shop, put on any hat given them, pose it for a moment on the head in a casual manner and buy it. The type of woman who buys in such a careless manner is usually the one who puts her hat on her head in the quickest possible time, sometimes as she goes out of the door or down the stairs. During the hat's life it rarely comes in contact with a mirror.

It's an old, old quarrel between the milliners and the women. The carelessness in the posing of a hat—and there's no space to go into it here. If a woman won't learn the necessity of taking care with a hat, then she won't and that's the end of it.

This is the very woman who exclaims with horror when she sees herself suddenly in a street mirror and realizes that she looks as though she slept in the park all night. But even this realization of her carelessness does not cure her of the habit.

VARIEITY THIS SEASON

However, as far as fashion goes, the milliners are generous. They can do no more than offer a multitude of shapes for a multitude of faces, with the advice that each hat should be given its full measure of attention, in the best light, before a mirror.

The work of the milliner ends there. Women may buy what they please if that is any help.

This spring they find that the beloved small hat has not disappeared from the forefront of fashion, although its supremacy was threatened by the Spanish hat with its immense brim, the 18th century hat with its puffed crown, and the Director's bonnet with its sugar-scoop brim.

After all these hats were well launched, the two rival styles of turbans were rushed into fashion, and their popularity threatened to submerge them.

As attractive as the Hindoo turban is, there are few women who would consent to buy it today. One hopes that its cheapness will subside and that it will come back into first fashion after the masses have tired of it.

In its American form, it is a most becoming bit of head covering, and its comfort is beyond compare.

The milliners succeeded in getting some extraordinary colorings for these turbans, and the combinations were well done; but when the hats sold like balloons at a circus, the entire idea was pushed aside by the leaders of fashion, who promptly placed their bids in the market for something else.

THE HINDOO TURBAN

The Hindoo head covering fulfills its name, for it really hides all of the head except the face from the eyes down. Therefore, it is passing strange that its rival should show most of the head. This is tilted over the eyes and brows and exposes a wide sweep of hair in back that is pulled up tight from the nape of the neck to the crown of the head, in order to accentuate the long line down the spine.

This type of turban is a pleasant companion to the shepherdess hat, which

New type Italian Bersagliere hat. It is a turban of green straw with a thick tassel of green sigrettes at side.

The milliners advanced and which a few women actually wear.

It is, as you remember, a merely a plateau of straw with a wreath of roses over and under it, and sometimes a bow of pastel ribbon at the back, resting on the head.

The sketch today shows one of the new turbans. It is draped. It is arranged high in the back by means of a bandeau. It is of green straw, with an immense tassel made of sigrettes.

Those who do not own these costly sprays use uncured ostrich plumes as a substitute.

The Adventures of Jimmy Coon

The Cherry Picker

LITTLE William had gone away from the Jones' Farm to visit his Cousin Fred. He had gone for a three weeks' visit. The cherry tree was ripe. How would the cherries get picked and what would they all do without cherry pie, as the hired man had no time to pick cherries?

Mother Jones was in despair. She couldn't think of a single person to pick the cherries. She talked about it all the time. One morning she woke up and half the cherries were picked. She woke up the next morning and not a single one was left on the tree.

Now who do you suppose could have been the cherry picker? You will have to guess. It was Cousin Bruin and Jimmy Coon.

Cousin Bruin loves cherries, and one dark night, he and Jimmy came softly up to the cherry tree. They looked into the barn. They saw that Ranger was not there. Then they took a peek into the hen house. Some of those old hens grew quite restless, but they didn't touch a single chicken, for they knew that if they did, there would be such a squawking that they wouldn't have a chance to pick a cherry. Farmer Jones was always on the lookout for Mr. Red Fox, and he had his gun handy, and if there was a noise from the hen house, he was ready to shoot on the minute.

Cousin Bruin didn't know this, but Jimmy Coon always hung around the Jones' Farm and what he didn't know, Chatterbox the Red Squirrel knew.

But Cousin Bruin thought it was a good thing to have a peek at those chickens, to make sure that they were all safe and sound when the cherries gave out.

Softly they drew near the house, Cousin Bruin climbed the cherry tree in a minute, and then how he did enjoy himself. Jimmy Coon didn't care a rap about cherries, and so I am sorry to say, he looked about for some scraps of food. Perhaps he would have turned over the garbage pail, only he found

He found a plate of Ranger's food, a plate of Ranger's food, and a dish of water left for Ranger, which just suited him.

Jimmy Coon, as you know, is very particular about what he eats, but not so much about what he drinks. He washed every bite of food he ate, and then, he did an awful thing—he drank all the water out of the dish where he had washed his food.

An awful thing to do, but Jimmy had never heard of germs. This was his habit and it had never hurt his health a single bit.

GIRL FLIRTS ARE SCORED BY PASTOR

At the Same Time He Hits the Mashing Employer a Good-Sized Wallop.

Boston, Mass.—An "emphatic, emphasized fool" is the brand applied by the Rev. Cortland Myers to the girl who attempts to flirt with her employer. He was speaking on "True Love" in Tremont temple.

"And," he continued, "the employer who will take the opportunity because of wages to leave his wife is a combination of the Kaiser, von Hindenburg, Von Tirpitz and Ludendorff and the crown prince and all the rest of that dirty crowd together.

"Young woman, when your employer, a married man, leans over your chair so near that you can feel his hot breath on your cheek, rise up in your womanhood and say: 'I'd rather starve to death than have any relations with you.' If any woman thinks she can steal another woman's love she is committing suicide. She ought to go into an insane asylum.

"I haven't words to express my opinion of that employer. He is rank, reckless, rotten at his heart. A girl might just as well trifle with a lion of the African jungle or a Florida rattlesnake."

Garden
Hints

BY SHEBA CHILDS HARVEY (OF PORTLAND)

Remember that beans should never be cultivated or the vines disturbed in any way while wet with dew or rain.

It is easier to keep weeds down by clean cultivation than it is to remove them after they gain a strong foothold.

If rose cutting are set in the early spring, they must be given plenty of moisture and protection from the afternoon sun through the summer. Cuttings taken in the fall need no special care for they are well rooted.

The extra shoots removed from the dahlias will grow as easily as geranium cuttings, if given plenty of water and protection from the sun until they take root. Set them where they are to grow and place a shade on the south side of the shoot, or cover with a newspaper through the middle of the day, removing it after the sun goes down.

Chemist Gives Recipe For Tan and Sunburn

A well known chemist recently made the following statement about face creams: "Any lady can easily and cheaply make a face cream or lotion that will improve the complexion, after roughness of the skin, prevent and more chapped hands, and cracked lips. It will remove as well as prevent tan or sunburn in summer, and softens the skin. Men will find it excellent after shaving.

To make it, merely get one ounce of glycerine and 25c worth of powdered grexite at any drug store. Dissolve the grexite in the glycerine, add a pint of water, and pour into bottles.

This makes more than a pint of thick antiseptic greaseless cream or lotion, very healing and soothing, and perfectly harmless. It is enough to last you for months, and costs you only a few cents. The same amount of cream purchased in tubes or bottles would cost you several dollars."—Adv.
