Consumers to Get Tips Here On the Market

The peak of the apricot market-ing season is now reached, and during the latter part of next week supplies are expected to diminish. At this time, despite the extreme values, consumers will find apricots about the cheapest stock they can possibly but up for winter's use. There has not been a season within recent years when the average quality of apricots has been so good as loganderries is on and consumers must hurry if they expect to secure the best stock. Present prices are high, but they are not likely to be Oregon tomatoes will soon arrive in more liberal supply, but prices will not be chesp at any time this season from present indications because canners are trying to con-tract everything in sight. Ie will be cheaper to can them at home, even at high prices now in effect, than to pay the still higher prices that packers must charge.
