

OVERHEAD CROSSINGS SUGGESTED OF NEW BRIDGES OVER RIVER

Planning Commission Proposes to Avoid Confusion of Car and Auto Traffic.

Overhead crossings on all Portland bridges are apparently to be an eventuality of the future. J. P. Newell, president of the planning commission, Wednesday issued instructions to the consultant to make studies and secure estimates preparatory to possible elimination of railroad grade crossings on the east side and Front street.

The commission visualizes a congested traffic condition at bridge approaches within the next few years and the instruction given is a step to avoid stilted movement of trains, streetcars and automobiles.

"A serious situation exists at the approaches to several of the bridges on the east side, where overhead crossings are urgently needed," Mr. Newell is quoted. "On the west side of the river the Front street situation demands attention. This will involve the whole study of railroad lines along the west side, and east side, and their interference with traffic. I believe a solution can be found, advantageous to the city and the railroads as well."

"We are faced with the necessity of early replacement of the Burnside and Morrison street bridges and the city planning commission will work in cooperation with the county and the city engineer for wider and easier bridge approaches, capable of carrying the much greater number of vehicles and traffic of all kinds which we must prepare for now in order to be ready five years from now, when the number of automobiles alone is expected to be at least twice what we have in the city of Portland today."

"On the east side greater safety should be secured by placing the streetcars and other traffic overhead. It is important to the industrial development of this part of the city that freer passage of switching trains and all railroads traffic be secured and this can come only by separation of the grades some time in the near future. We intend to find out now what the best plan would be, both for the public, the industries and the railroads."
