

SPEAKERS HEARD AT BAKER-UNION COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

Program Full of Talks on Timely Topics by Foremost Educators of the State.

Baker, Oct. 9.—With 200 teachers in attendance, the Baker-Union county joint institute opened here Wednesday at the Baker high school building with an address on "The Making of Man," by Edwin T. Reed, college editor at the Oregon Agricultural college, and with a short talk by J. A. Churchill, state superintendent of schools. Mrs. Charles Bagey of Seattle, field secretary for the national Y. W. C. A., spoke on the subject of county Y. W. C. A. organizations, and Mrs. Margaret Craig Curran, head of the rural department, Oregon State Normal school, gave an address upon "Health Contests and Standards, or Development of the Human Thoroughbred."

The last hour of the morning was devoted to instruction work in the high school department by Dr. C. A. Gregory, professor of education at the University of Oregon; primary and rural work by Miss Maude Ragon, primary teacher at the Creston school in Portland; intermediate and advanced departments by J. M. Tice, and industrial arts by Miss Bertha Davis.

During the afternoon Frank K. Welles of Portland spoke on the holding of the pupil's attention, and Dr. C. A. Gregory gave an address on "The Philosophy of Life." Departmental instruction closed the program for the day.

At 3 o'clock the teachers and instructors were taken for an automobile tour of the valley adjacent to Baker by members of the Commercial club, who also met the visitors from Union county in automobiles and conducted them to their lodgings.

Roseburg, Oct. 9.—One of the largest realty deals to be recorded in the county was closed this week, when Robert Sarint sold his 1200 acre ranch, near Glide, to G. De Bernard of Crescent City, Cal. SERG. JOHN M'GINN DOESN'T KNOW CAUSE OF PLANE ACCIDENT

Aerial Patrolman Unable to Determine Trouble Resulting in Lieut. Webb's Death.

Medford, Oct. 9.—The body of Lieutenant H. W. Webb, the army state forest service patrol aviator killed Tuesday, when the De Havilland plane he was piloting fell near Gold Ray, was sent from this city to Glendale, Cal., his home, today, in accordance with the telegraphic instructions sent by his widow and mother.

Sergeant John C. McGinn, who was flying with Webb from Eugene to Medford when the plane fell, and who was badly injured, will recover. During a lucid moment at the hospital Wednesday he said he could not explain the cause of the accident. The last thing he knew the engine stopped, and in maneuvering for a landing the machine went into a tail spin. His last view of Webb was his struggle with the stick to regain control and bring the plane back to equilibrium. His next recollection was waking up in the hospital.

"I don't think we were short of oil or gas," said McGinn, "and as far as I know, there was no serious engine trouble. We were about 1000 feet up when the engine suddenly stopped, why I don't know. In going down we apparently lost momentum and fell back in a tail spin. Webb worked hard to get her back, but it was too late."

NO LANDING PLACES

Lieutenant C. H. Hidenour and Sergeant H. F. Fisher of the state forest patrol, who arrived here from Eugene late Tuesday after hearing of the accident, and made an investigation at the scene, declared, in their opinion, that the accident was primarily due to engine trouble, entailing an enforced landing. To make a landing at any time with a De Havilland, they said, the pilot must speed the plane at 60 miles an hour before stopping the engine, so that the air reaction will hold the plane up and allow a gradual descent. Because of the small landing place, Lieutenant Webb was unable to attain this speed.
