

FIVE CHARGED WITH VIOLATING SECURITY ACT TO FACE TRIAL

Court Bonds Fixed for Alleged Bootleggers Arrested Recently in City.

Determined to end moonshining United States revenue officers Monday charged five alleged bootleggers with violation of the national security act. Conviction under this law means a $1000 fine with option of a year's jail sentence in addition.

The national security act, passed November 21, 1918, provides that no grain, fruit or other foodstuff be used in the making of liquor.

Released under $1000 bonds and awaiting trial are Lavacetto Vincenzo, S. and F. Plonovi, wealthy Portland Italians arrested last week after 1400 gallons of wine was found on their farm, and Antonio Bort, whose wine was seized at 415 Ivon street. Frank G. Dangelio, arrested Saturday at 6015 Fifty-first street southeast, is in jail, unable to furnish bond.

K. F. McDonald, a carpenter, Saturday was taken into custody and charged with manufacturing and selling stills. It is alleged that he made stills at East Eighth and Belmont streets and that last April he sold one to Morris Galbreath, now in jail for manufacturing moonshine. McDonald is one of the few men arrested so far for making stills.

Charles E. Bass, whom federal officers say was Galbreath's selling partner, is also under arrest. Galbreath was arrested last week at Bonita station, where a complete still was found. It is said Bass worked in a local fruit house and provided the materials to make the moonshine. Then he peddled it in Portland.
