Armistice Day

November 11, 1919

A year ago star shells were breaking over No Man's Land; artillery moved up behind the advancing infantry; airplanes were the eyes of opposing forces; ships at sea were being guarded by the steel monsters of the navy; factory, loom and farm were giving their all-because war was our chief business.

American pride and patriotism swelled at the valiant deeds of Chateau-Thierry, Soissons, St. Mihiel, the Argonne and Sedan. The stamina and courage, that irresistible spirit of America's great fighting forces, was applying itself to the consummation of those noble purposes to which the nation had dedicated itself.

In those trying days, men had but one thought -to do the job and do it well. All else amounted to little. If doing the job meant death, with deliberation and calmness, then, giving up life was the most glorious, noble and honorable thing man could give his country.

A brief span of time has intervened between then and now.

Star shells are no longer symbols of warthey have become rockets for the celebration of the victory which was ours; No Man's Land is turning its face to the sun with crops of golden grain; artillery steel has been wrought into a thousand plowshares; airplanss have become the forerunners of greater progress; fighting ships are envoys of peace; factory, loom and farm are places where men have turned the full spirit of war into the accomplishment of work well done. A new era is here—an era in which living for one's country should be the all-important, all possessing determination of the day. If to die for one's country in time of war is man's most noble act, then living for it in time of peace will justify the deeds of our valiant dead. Let us live for our country today, tomorrow and always.
