

PRESIDENT COULD VETO RESOLUTION SAYING WAR OVER

Constitution Gives Him Power to Veto Resolution Such as Lodge Offered.

SURPRISE TO LODGE CROWD

They Believed Executive Had No Authority to Pass Upon Resolution Declaring War Ended.

Washington, Nov. 21.—(U. P.)—The Lodge concurrent resolution, which declares the war at an end, can and will be vetoed by President Wilson, in case it is passed by both house and senate, in the opinion of high administration officials today. They cited the constitution to prove that the president has this power.

This came as an evident surprise to supporters of the Lodge resolution, which was introduced in congress just before adjournment. They believe the executive had no authority to interfere with a concurrent resolution and that the Lodge measure could be passed by both houses, thus ending the war without adoption of the peace treaty. Discovery of the constitutional authority which has seldom, if ever, been exercised by a president, was considered a blow to their plans.

CONSTITUTION CITED

The administration supporters cited article 1, section 7, paragraph 3 of the constitution as their authority. It reads as follows: "Every order, resolution or vote to which the concurrence of the senate and house of representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the president of the United States and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the senate and the house of representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill."

This, the administration contends, undoubtedly gives Wilson authority to veto the Lodge measure.

WILSON TO USE VETO

The president apparently is determined to veto Lodge's proposal, confident that a two thirds vote cannot be marshaled in congress to pass it over his head. Thus he plans to prevent the war being officially ended until the peace treaty has been adopted.

At Speaker Gillett's office it was stated that it was not customary to send concurrent resolutions to the president, but that in this case it would undoubtedly be necessary under the constitution. This opinion was expressed after the constitutional provision had been scanned.

CUSHING OPINION QUOTED

Administration officials also declared that in an opinion rendered in 1854 by Attorney General Cushing, he stated that congress could not pass any law which in effect coerces the discretion of the president, except with his approbation, unless by a concurrent vote of two thirds of both houses upon his previous refusal to sign a bill.

Another opinion on this question, cited by the administration, is contained in a report by the senate judiciary committee, made January 26, 1897, as the result of an investigation of the question as to whether a concurrent resolution requires the president's signature.

Whether concurrent resolutions are required to be sent to the president of the United States must depend upon their mere form, but upon the fact whether they contain matter which is properly to be regarded as legislative in its character and effect, the report stated, "if they do, they must be presented for his approval. Otherwise they need not be; the nature or substance of the resolution and not its form controls the question of its disposition."

WILSON EAGER TO SPEAK

Senator Underwood conferred with Secretary Tumulty at the White House today on the Democratic program. Senators Hitchcock and Underwood will leave Washington immediately for a brief rest before the reconvening of congress.

Wilson is writing a strong appeal to congress to take up again and ratify the peace treaty. He is preparing an argument which the administration hopes will bring about a compromise and speedy ratification. If it doesn't then the president is ready to see the fight carried into the 1920 national election in which, however, he will not participate beyond urging voters, regardless of party affiliations, to demonstrate they want the United States to join the league.

Wilson is anxious to go before congress and deliver his message in person. This is opposed by his physicians.

Bloodhounds Are Failure

Yakima, Wash., Nov. 21.—Hope that the bloodhounds would pick up the trail of the men who murdered Ernest Newcomb at Sunnyside Sunday night was dispelled when, after several trials, the dogs failed to pick up the scent.
