

ITALY IN HANDS OF COWARDS, DECLARES POET D'ANNUNZIO

He Still Considers Himself the Savior of His Country, Recent Reports Show.

By Camillo Cianfara

Rome, Nov. 26.—(Delayed)—(U. P.)—Gabriele d'Annunzio still considers himself "the savior of Italy," and has sent word to his agents here of "cowards and deserters," according to a Flume dispatch from Epoch's correspondent there, received today.

The dispatch seemingly contradicted recent reports that d'Annunzio was prepared to come to an agreement with the Italian government and abandon his Alpine castle. The news, however, was found for him to withdraw gracefully.

Speaking at the inauguration ceremonies of the new mayor of Flume, according to the correspondent, d'Annunzio demanded to know "who will save Italy if not those of our faith?"

Referring to the recent general election for the choice of deputies, which showed a decided gain by the radical socialist element throughout Italy, the poet declared the nation was "sweating blood" and "knows no shame."

The poet, hinting at possible enlargement of his plane, declared "our work is just beginning." He asked a "reconfirmation" of his "full powers," declaring he must know his followers were unanimously with him.

"Italy must be preserved," the Flume dictator declared, according to the dispatch. "You know she is not now the prize of heroes, but the booty of cowards and deserters."

MARKETS AGAIN SHATTERED WITH PANICKY PRICES

Stocks Close at Bottom Prices With Material Net Losses; Railroads Despair of Street.

By Brodman Wall

New York, Nov. 29.—Stocks were weak and active throughout the entire session Friday and closed almost at the bottom prices, with material net losses. Some of the lower prices were new ones for the year, particularly in rails. Extreme declines ran in average above two points, but in many cases were as high as five or six and in the case of General Motors amounted to no less than 25. Even silver broke, being down to $1.29 against $1.35 on Wednesday.

Although much selling was professional and for short account, it was evident that liquidation took place on a large scale. This liquidation was due to the account of two who had come through the panic of two weeks ago but who became alarmed when they approached again. There was also liberal selling for the account of persons who bought in that panic and also for many who took the rally seriously and purchased stocks in the early part of this week.

BANKS CAUSE RALLY

It is now evident that the rally which was a feature of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday was forced by banking interests. The banking interests may have been perfectly sincere in the belief that they could stop the big decline. The experience of today throws doubt upon their ability to do this. Therefore the market is in a worse condition than it was at the bottom of the panic two weeks ago, for then the banking interests had confidence in their judgment. The technical condition of the market is therefore shattered.

As for the cause of today's decline, opinions differ.

There were three important bearish elements. One was the Mexican situation. The second bearish factor was the coal problem and the third factor was unsettlement on money. In spite of heavy liquidation in the stock market money got up to 10 per cent in the afternoon.

SPECULATION CURTAILED

The action of the reserve bank in curtailing speculation in commodities which was forecast two days ago, became a reality. Speculation was to be prevented in things other than securities. The stock market will suffer at first from curtailment in speculation in other things because the speculators who are now being hit have lines of stocks in anticipation of large profits to be realized.

Early Hearing of Sorensen Case May Yet Be Impossible

Attempts to hasten the trial of N. P. Sorensen, wealthy timberman, charged with driving an automobile through the streets while intoxicated, probably will fail, according to indications today.

Deputy City Attorney Lansing appeared Friday before Presiding Judge Robert W. Wilbur, counsel for Sorensen. Wilbur said it would be impossible for him to try the case before December 5, subject to the approval of the circuit court and asked to have the case set for December 5. It is now set on the calendar for February 9. Lansing said the city is ready to meet any stand made and asked that the date be advanced because it might be impossible to keep all the witnesses here until February.

And during that time the correct, adequate banking connection will be important as never before. The farmer and the banker must work together in ever closer cooperation, that each may get the viewpoint of the other and impart the wisdom gained in solving problems in his own particular field.

If the officers of the Ladd & Tilton Bank can be of service to the farmer with advice or information, they will be very glad, for the prosperity of the Pacific Northwest is a matter of vital interest to every loyal citizen.
