

PERMANENT WORKS
IN NORTH PORTLAND
HARBOR ADVOCATED

Chamber Mindful of Need of Several Industrial Concerns
Now Awaiting Locations.

With several industrial concerns desiring factory sites in North Portland, but delaying actual purchase until permanent harbor improvements can be guaranteed, the department of industries of the Chamber of Commerce is urging the Port of Portland commission and the United States engineers to get together on some definite plan for the improvement of North Portland harbor. A permanent backwater harbor of sufficient depth to accommodate any vessel coming up the Columbia river was guaranteed several years ago after the harbor was dredged out and a bulkhead was built across the upper end of the channel between North Portland and Hayden island. This bulkhead was to work a double purpose by keeping silt from filling up the North Portland harbor and to divert the waters of the Columbia to scour out a channel for Vancouver.

The bulkhead was a success in attaining these two ends, but the scouring process on the Vancouver side of the river threatened to undermine the S. P. & S. bridge supports. Officials of the railroad threatened suit to force removal of the bulkhead, but it suddenly sprang a leak and has been in that condition since.

The size of the break in the bulkhead has permitted the carrying of silt into the North Portland harbor. Several deep water ships are due in the harbor soon and industrial concerns are urging the immediate improvement of the harbor and adoption of a policy to maintain a permanent depth.

Mrs. Dunbar Goes to Tuberculosis Meet

Mrs. Saldie Orr-Dunbar, executive secretary of the Oregon Tuberculosis association, left Sunday evening for Chicago to attend a conference of regional and state secretaries of the National Tuberculosis association for outlining policies for 1920. Additional medical service will be discussed and an enlarged usefulness of the modern health crusade will be considered. The meetings will be held in the La Salle hotel January 8, 9 and 10. George Everson, regional secretary for the seven Northwestern states, with headquarters in Portland, will also attend the conference.
