The proverbial function of Leap Year, after all, will have its place at Reed college. The shy coed will even be encouraged to make use of the prerogative granted woman one year out of every four.

After the formation of a bachelors' club in House F, whose members have sworn themselves to strict celibacy during this hazardous season, the girls had practically resigned themselves to laying away their feminine allurements in moth balls for the year.

But Dan Cupid was not to be game-lawed out of a hunting ground so prolific as the college campus. Gathering up his bow and arrows, he fled to House H, old-time rival of House F. The boys of this house have rallied to his following.

Sending an opportunity to carry on the old spirit of rivalry, the boys decided to take action at once, after hearing of the vows of bachelorhood taken by the boys in House F.

George W. Esterly, pioneer placer miner and owner of a lucrative claim near Waldo, Josephine county, has practically completed the driving of a 1800-foot tunnel to take care of the tailings from his mine, according to advices received at the office of the bureau of mines and geology in the Oregon building.

Construction of this tunnel will obviate the necessity of elevating the tailings from the pit in which operations are now being carried on, according to H. M. Parks, director of the bureau of mines, and the output may be increased to a large extent because of the extra water thus made available for placer operations.
