to enforce its mandate against extrava-gant loans for speculative purposes. This is as it should be. Wall Street will be perfectly satisfied if the rule is appiled against speculators in copper, cot-ton, boots and shoes, woolen goods and other commodities where the speculation has become scandalous. There is no wild speculation in Wall Street and all that the operators hope to do new is to bring about a quiet and respectable advance in the market that will discount to some extent the optimism that is being developed. The fact that a few American ships are returning from Europe without cargoes is not of moral importance.
