Class Play to Be Given by Students

By Helen H. Hutchison OF UNUSUAL interest is the announcement of the production of the senior class play to be given at the Girls' Polytechnic school Friday evening by the members of the February class. Mrs. Harry Beal Torrey is coaching the students for their parts, and the scenery and costumes have been made by the members of the cast. Two one-act comedies will occupy the program for the evening, one of them, a Harvard play, "Three Pills in a Bottle," is a work of promising possibilities; the other is "Lady Gregory's play, "Spreading the News," Miss Anna Iverson, head of the art department, is the senior class advisor and is assisting with the performance.

Baker Players Offer Clever Comedy

A DECIDEDLY refreshing comedy livened with sarcastic witticisms is presented at the Baker this week in "Nothing But Lies." The story follows the fortunes of the advertising firm of George Washington Cross, junior member of the advertising firm, who lies to make people happy. Cross' ability as a diplomatic evader of the truth is put to severe tests by the whims of his partner and the exigencies of the company. The climax is reached when Allan Nigh, posing as a disciple of absolute truth at all times, publishes a libelous magazine called "Zig Zag Zig" in which he attacks the character of the members of his father's firm and bids fair to ruin the business. After no end of complicated situations the whole matter rights itself in a preposterous fashion that swallows up all the Baker Stock company carry out the work of the farce in their usual capable manner.

THE Stroller notices

THAT we suspect that the persons who held up the Beaumont car conductor were patrons of his. That they were probably trying to get over for the number of times he has held them up at the end of the line. That the young woman who suggests our coffee for us made us get up early this morning. That the seamstress was coming for the day. That one of the legislators is in favor of moving the state capital from Salem to Portland. That it is probably his idea of capital punishment. That every time we let a little curley-head play with our watch we feel that something is going to happen. That it usually does. That considering the dress and affectations of some high school boys we see on the streets, we marvel that our good "dad" had forbearance to keep violent hands off us when we were that age. That we've eaten the last of the home-grown, home-canned beans. That this morning we ate an egg from our own chicken. That yesterday on the way home we joined a number of fellow citizens on a street corner and stood gazing into the sky just because they were doing it. That at first we thought they were looking at an airplane. That we finally discovered they were rubbering at a chap perched atop the flagpole on the Northwest Bank building. That he was attracting much attention. That he's welcome to it. Sure We Will; Here It Is Dear Friend Stroller: Will you please print this little notice in your column Tuesday, January 13. That R. C. is the saddest fellow in Portland. That he will never wear an opal ring again. As ever yours, R. C. We Enjoy a Pipe, Thanks Fort Canby, Jan. 2.—Dear Smoky Smiles—Sorry I am broke and have no more cigars. My only chance for a smoke is to mooch cigarettes from my boys. Yours truly, H. B. L. Look out for the purity squad, H. B. L.

John Hand Is Engaged for Concert

By J. L. Wallis JOHN HAND, American tenor, who sang at The Auditorium Monday night for the first time in Portland, made such a splendid impression that he was engaged as soloist for the big annual concert to be given at The Auditorium on the night of January 22 by the Norwegian male chorus of this city. The audience Monday night was not large for an Auditorium audience—about 1000 were present—but it was an enthusiastic one, and everyone will be a booster for John Hand, who, but for an occasional too open tone, would be that very illustrious ideal tenor. Mr. Hand has a powerful voice, of pleasing true tenor quality, and a range that places within his reach anything written for the high male voice. Monday night's program contained three famous operatic gems, "Cloué e Mar" from "La Gioconda," "M'Appari Tutt' Amor" from "Martha" and "Vesti La Giubba" from "I Pagliacci" and groups of ballads that appeal to the heart, among them "Love Song" by Paganini, which proved one of the best numbers. The applause justified several extra numbers, including "Mother Macree," "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "A Little Bit of Heaven," "There's a Long, Long Trail" and "For You Alone." La Vae Janson, the piano soloist and accompanist, did much to make the event the big success. He is an excellent musician. Novel Program Offered After taking the east by storm, with original story music concerts, the Gray-Lhevinnes have finally reached Portland and will appear at The Auditorium Tuesday night. The Gray-Lhevinnes take romance wherever they go and their audiences catch the thrill of a "different" something in their music. They play so many compositions that have a story and in a simple, home-like fashion they always tell the stories to their hearers. A music critic on one of the Chicago dailies, after hearing a Gray-Lhevinne concert, said: "The charm of a Gray-Lhevinne concert is, they make the great classics human and heart appealing."

"TINKER BOB" STORIES BY CARLYSLE H. HOLCOMB

THE Bob Cat is Suspicious CHIEF PORKY and Major Pole Cat went at once to the home of Snoopy the Bob Cat. Mr. Bob Cat was no real friend of either of these forest dwellers and he had threatened many times to do them both harm if he could. He never yet had had the opportunity because both Major Pole Cat and Chief Porky were always on guard. Mr. Bob Cat was afraid of the terrible odor that Major Pole Cat carried with him. And as for Chief Porky, his thorn quills were so sharp and many that Snoopy Bob Cat let him alone. But even with this protection they were somewhat afraid of Mr. Bob Cat lest he might catch them sleeping. When they arrived at the cave in the side of the hill, Chief Porky said: "Major Pole Cat, you stand on this side of the door and I'll stand on the other, then when he comes to the door he will do us no harm because one is on either side." When they were stationed Chief Porky cried loudly: "Bob Cat come out." There was no reply to his first cry so he called again. "Bob Cat come out in reply to this call they heard a low growl and a shuffle of feet on the rock floor; then they saw the pointed ears of Snoopy the Bob Cat appearing in the dim light cave. "Hi-a-a," said Snoopy. "What do you little forest cats want to wake me out of a good sleep for?" "We are here because the king sent us," said Chief Porky. "The king wants to see you right away. There is an important question that you can answer." "I don't usually go out in the daylight," said Snoopy. "I get my food at night and sleep in the daytime. And then the light hurts my eyes." "But the king said you should come at once," said Major Pole Cat. "And you will have to go." "I'll have to go will I?" Snoopy eyed his visitors scornfully. "If it wasn't for the awful door you carry with you, I'd make much of you right now."
