

GLASS READY TO QUIT ABINET FOR SEAT IN SENATE

Lawrence Believes Position Will Be Offered to Assistant Secretary Leffingwell by Wilson.

By David Lawrence
Copyrighted, 1920.
Washington, Jan. 22.—Who is to be the next secretary of the treasury? The delay in appointing a successor to Secretary Glass, who is soon to take his seat in the senate, has occasioned many an inquiry, not only from persons in this country who are vitally interested in fiscal policy, but from foreign countries where eyes are fixed upon that government whose moral influence and physical assistance in the financial world is unparalleled in history.

President Wilson is represented as going over the situation very carefully, and while it had been expected that Glass would take his seat in the senate by January 15, it appears that the coming of the pan-American financial conference interfered with the plan.

APPOINTMENT DEFERRED
It was hardly considered possible that a new secretary of the treasury could be confirmed in time to welcome the delegates, and with the finance ministers of Central and South America and many other distinguished visitors here. It would have been somewhat embarrassing not to have a secretary of the treasury to receive them all, so Secretary Glass has stayed on, but an appointment will surely be made in the next few days, as the pan-American conference comes to an end on Saturday.

Rarely has there been such an interesting situation with reference to a cabinet appointment as that which surrounds the naming of a new executive for the treasury department. The man who is given the job must have the absolute confidence of his chief, because with prohibition to enforce, income taxes to collect, and fiscal policy to manage, affecting foreign governments and billions of dollars, the responsibility of the post cannot be exaggerated.

PARTIZANSHIP BARRED
Nevertheless, there are certain people who think the president ought to make a political appointment, that he ought not to take to his bosom in these intensely political days anyone who is not a dyed-in-the-wool Democrat. No such considerations entered Mr. Wilson's mind when he picked Herbert Hoover for food administrator, Harry A. Gardner for fuel administrator, Edward H. Stettinius for assistant secretary of war, Henry J. Davidson to head the Red Cross, and approve the appointment of numerous Republicans to war jobs, and it is not generally credited that the president is thinking of politics at all or that he is being interested in the slightest by those who believe a political appointment is just the thing to hold the party together in presidential year.

As a matter of fact, Secretary Glass has recommended to the president the appointment of Assistant Secretary Leffingwell, one of the mainstays of the treasury during the war in handling reconstruction finance.

NOT BRYANISTIC
Leffingwell came here at the request of McAdoo to do war work. While he is not a democrat in the sense that he voted for Bryan in 1896, he is a Wilson man through and through. In fact, if the test of Democracy were whether a man voted for Bryan when the silver question was up, it is doubtful whether half the men in the president's cabinet could qualify as Democrats.
There will be a good deal of discussion this year, anyway, as to what really constitutes a Democrat, and it would not be surprising if the test in 1920 was whether a man supported wholeheartedly the League of Nations and the foreign policy of Woodrow Wilson. So far as the Bryan influence goes, there has not been a conspicuous appointment which could be termed Bryanistic for nearly four years, ever since Bryan departed as secretary of state.
Official Washington is really in the dark as to who will be appointed. The president is keeping his own counsel. The biggest vacancy in the government today, as nearly as anybody can determine Leffingwell himself is not a candidate for the post, and though anxious to serve if called, would not be disappointed or change the opinions he has had of President Wilson's foreign policy even if he were not named, but in the treasury department itself and throughout Washington, wherever the wisdom of making the best appointment possible in this critical period is recognized, there will be considerable regret if Leffingwell is not named, for he is distinctly popular as a public official and hardly a political type either. The chances at present writing are that he will be appointed, but nobody but the president really knows as yet.
