

COURT SMALLPOX CASE IS FEATURED BY LIVELY TILTS

Religious Angle Creeps Into Issue in Which City Health Officer Parrish is the Complainant.

Nearly the entire Saturday session in the municipal court was taken up with the trial of H. P. Bush, Christian Science practitioner, who resides at 892 East Twenty-eighth street north. Bush was charged by Dr. George Parrish, city health officer, with willfully violating the city health ordinance by failing to report a case of smallpox. Parrish claimed "Bobby" Bush had smallpox on November 11. After hearing the evidence and the arguments of Deputy City Attorney Fred Stadler and Wilson T. Hume, Judge Rossman announced that he would announce his verdict next Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock.

REMEMBERS NEIGHBORHOOD BOW

The case was one of the most hotly contested tried recently in the police court. At times it developed the proportions of a small neighborhood quarrel, six or seven mothers taking the stand against Bush. The women attempted to testify that their children had contracted smallpox by playing with Bobby at school, but the court ruled out this testimony upon the objection of Hume.

MOTHER GIVES TESTIMONY

Mrs. M. E. Sherman, 952 Alameda drive, testified that she saw Bobby during the early part of November, on his way home from school with other children and that he had many black marks or pimples on his face. Mrs. Sherman's boys became ill with smallpox November 23, she said. Little Betty and Bobby Maguire, 999 East Thirty-second street north, were also introduced by the city. Bobby testified that he had noticed small pimples on Bobby Bush's face.

HUME ACCUSES PARRISH

In his argument, Hume charged Parrish with making the entire matter a religious issue. He charged Parrish with trying to dictate the laws of the city, pointing to recent health measures passed by the council upon the recommendation of Parrish. Hume said the boy did not have smallpox on the date mentioned in the complaint, and that, therefore, the father did not violate any law by failing to report a smallpox case.

Deputy City Attorney Stadler called Parrish to the stand again to refute the argument of Hume. Parrish denied that the case was prompted by any desire to

Friend Pedestrian, Careless, Too He Courts and Often Gets Injury

AN 1850 PEDESTRIAN IN A 1920 TOWN

Automobile accidents will not be reduced to the minimum in Portland if pedestrians continue to violate all rules of safety. The reckless automobile drivers can be removed from the streets, but that will not halt accidents as long as pedestrians star-gaze across intersections and dream across the middle of the block.

Pedestrians have rights on the streets. And automobiles also have rights. Both have places in the traffic world. The state and city have regulated automobiles. Rules have been laid down for pedestrians. Automobile drivers can meet with regulations, but pedestrians will continue to be run down until they recognize their obligations and comply therewith.

Here are some antics of pedestrians: A man walked rapidly out of the Alisky building, his mind on something other than safety. Without going to the corner or looking in either direction, he proceeded directly across the street until he walked directly into the side of a passing streetcar and was thrown to the pavement. He then wanted to sue the car company for damages.

A pedestrian was proceeding rather slowly across Twelfth and Burnside, glancing in every direction except the line of traffic. A motorcycle started to pass him. He stepped backward. The machine turned. He turned. It finally went clear around him and the rider dismounted.

"What are you trying to do?" he asked, heatedly. "Why, I am looking for my wife," he replied.

A streetcar was moving slowly ahead at First and Alder, a pedestrian crossing toward the car, but looking elsewhere, stumbled on the fender and fell on it.

At Sixth and Washington last week a woman walked directly in front of an automobile, although the semaphore signaled for the machine to proceed. The driver signaled and stopped. The woman jumped, elevated her nose, threw her head back, stamped one foot and refused to move for several seconds. The automobile had no business there, she thought.

A report at the police station shows that a woman was struck down at Sixty-sixth and Sandy Wednesday under the following circumstances: She was walking across the street, looked in her purse and slowed down. An automobile honked to warn her of its presence. Without looking, she backed into the rear fender of the machine. Automobiles often are in the way, it seems.

At Third and Alder a nurse was crossing with a baby buggy. She was just outside the intersection and paying no heed to traffic. The bell of a car, slowing for the stop, changed. The nurse screamed and dropped the carriage in the center of the track. Fortunately, the car was stopped.

This is the experience of a driver last week between Sixth and Stark and Broadway and Stark. He was proceeding west on Stark. At Sixth an elderly man walked in front of the machine, dodged backward and then dashed forward again. Before the machine crossed the intersection an accident was narrowly averted with two men jaywalking with their backs to traffic. In the center of the next block a woman, with her back to the car, walked diagonally across the street from behind a parked automobile, and at the next corner a man walked from behind a street into the hood of the automobile as it waited for the car to proceed.

An automobile doesn't always have to be in motion to collide with pedestrians. They will walk on the car at times, if it is stationary.

CONFLICT CLAIMED BETWEEN U. S. AND STATE DRY LAWS

Test Case Brought in Portland Court to Settle Finally the Moot Question of Jurisdiction.

Claims of conflicting jurisdiction between the federal and state laws on prohibition will be entered before District Judge Hawkins Monday by Attorney Paul Long, who is defending two alleged bootleggers. The contention of Long will be to the effect that the constitutional amendment establishing prohibition supersedes the state law on the matter, and that a person can no longer be prosecuted under the Oregon law—at least, not while he is standing trial under the federal law also. Various citations of law, including the white slave enactment, anti-trust laws and others will be brought forward by Long in his effort to prove that the state no longer has jurisdiction over a matter wherein the federal government has legislated.

NO CONFLICT, IS CONTENDED

The chief argument of Earl Bernard, deputy district attorney, who will appear for the state, is expected to be that section of the national prohibition amendment to the constitution which states explicitly that the various states may pass concurrent laws to aid in the enforcement of the act. According to Long, the federal government has no provision was put in for the express purpose of meeting such contingencies as the one raised by Long.

Another point on which Long is ex-

OVER 5000 GIRLS SEEK COMMUNITY SERVICE IN CITY

Trinity Parish House Has Program to Get Respectable Young Men and Women Acquainted.

"A conservative estimate places the number of girls and young women in Portland without homes and home privileges and opportunities at 5000 and what Community Service wants to do is to meet the right kind of young men and to have the right kind of a good time," said Miss Kathleen Cookburn, who is in charge of the girls' work of the newly organized Community Service of Portland.

"These girls are living in rooming houses, boarding houses and hall-rooms of small hotels with no facilities for entertaining their friends and what is still worse with no opportunity for making the right kind of friends, particularly of meeting the right kind of young men. And I might add right here that young men are at a loss to know how to meet the right kind of girls; many of them have asked me to help to meet some nice girls. These splendid young men are the ones that we are inviting to our parties and they are so pleased that they invariably ask for a second invitation."

"The third of our series of Friday evening parties at Trinity Parish House will take place this week, with the girls from Olds, Wartman & King and Lipman-Wolfe as the hostesses. Excellent music for dancing is provided for these affairs, refreshments are served and the young people have perfectly splendid times. At the first of these parties the young women employed by the Hazelwood company were hostesses and last week the young women who live at the Martha Washington hotel were hostesses. "Our program of recreation and education includes classes in music, art, drama, Americanization, dancing, current events, public speaking, etc. In the spring hiking parties will be organized and there will be tennis, ball games and swimming. Where organized work already exists we are cooperating as we have no desire to usurp the rights of others or to overlap. A membership campaign is being inaugurated in the hope of securing the moral support and interest as well as the financial backing of at least 5000 Portland people. T. H. Joyce is chairman of this committee. Active memberships are $1; contributing memberships are $25 and sustaining memberships are $100.

New Naturalization Proceedings Adopted By Circuit Judges

New regulations governing naturalization proceedings were adopted Saturday by the seven Multnomah county circuit judges. The new set of rules will materially reduce the time necessary to devote to each candidate, and it is probable that the judges will be enabled to formally admit an alien to citizenship in five minutes, compared to the 30 or 40 minutes previously required. This will not mean, however, that those seeking to become citizens will be able to escape any of the former requirements. Each candidate must present himself to the naturalization examiner at room 331, new postoffice building, to submit to a thorough examination as to his qualifications for citizenship. This was formerly conducted in court and consumed a vast amount of time.

With his certificate of fitness, he must then file his final petition for naturalization at the county clerk's office. All those who have previously filed their petitions must also submit themselves for examination.
