

CHURCH MUST BE PRACTICAL TO WIN, DECLARES PASTOR

Dr. Short Delivers Farewell Sermon; To Enter Methodists' Temperance and Morals Work.

"The church of God is not going to prosper as it should until some of its pious prayers can be transformed into dollars to take care of needy folks. After 30 years in the ministry I say to you tonight that the only thing that makes a church great is the cup of life passing around to the great body of folks outside its pale."

This message was left with the congregation of Wilbur Methodist church on Sunday evening as a feature of the farewell sermon of Dr. Francis Burgett Short, who has been elected a secretary of the board of temperance and public morals of his church, as well as chaplain of the J. C. Penney chain of stores. He said:

"What a great privilege it is to carry the cup of life around the cup that cheers people—it's got to be made red with sacrifice and a lot of us are not going to do those things that sacrifice means. The church that doesn't sacrifice, that doesn't have any interest in the outside, doesn't grow."

Addressing the congregation at the First Methodist Episcopal church Sunday morning, Dr. Joshua Stansfield said:

"We may state as a safe test of every really essential, saving Christian doctrine two things: First, that it is practical; second, that it is ethical and moral. This is true of the doctrine of God, sin, salvation, holiness, immortality."

"These all may, and should be, known in experience. God—the triune God—should be personally experienced as God, our divine father; Christ, our divine saviour; the holy ghost, our divine comforter."

"The doctrine of the divine trinity as a metaphysical conception is an uncertainty, but the doctrine of the triune God as a Christian experience in the church is glorious and forever true. So also with every experience doctrine of Christ."

Dr. W. T. McElveen, at the First Congregational church anniversary service Sunday morning, said:

"The church is something more than a group of people gathered together to sustain cooperatively a private chaplain. The church is not simply a lecture association, a body of people who gather weekly to hear a well paid orator deliver a carefully prepared address. A church is a family of believers, a brotherhood of workers. What can this church do? It can do almost anything. Its possibilities for effect are enormous. Fortunately we are not handicapped by a group of mentally backward people who are afraid that this church may do something which is not ecclesiastically proper. Some churches have no definite conception of what they are in the world to do. They have a very feeble sense of the purpose for which they exist."

LAND EXCHANGES TO BE ACTIVE IN STATE, SAYS HALL

Chicago Man Points Out Advantage of Government and Private Owners Consolidating Interests

To consult with District Forester George Cecil, Assistant District Forester C. J. Buak and several private timber owners who have land within national forest boundaries, relative to land exchanges as provided for in a bill either passed or pending in congress, William L. Hall of the firm of Hall, Kellogg & Co., of Chicago, is in Portland.

"The district centering in Portland is going to be very active in land exchanges," says Hall. "There are large acreages of private lands intermingled with government lands within a national forest, and it will be advantageous both to the government and to private interests to have their holdings consolidated, and the only means offered is through exchanges."

LEGISLATION IS PENDING
Hall has to do with exchanges of logged-off as well as timber lands. Legislation is now pending in congress authorizing exchanges for several forests in Oregon including the Santiam, Siuslaw, Siskiyou and Deschutes, while legislation has already passed for the Whittman, Ochoco and Oregon.

"It is the purpose of my company to keep fully in touch with the government in its policy of building up the national forests," said Hall. "Hall was for 20 years a member of the forest service and is thoroughly conversant with its policies. While in the service at Washington, D. C., he inaugurated the planting work of the forests, and later had charge of the products department during which time the forest products laboratory at Madison, Wis., was opened. Hall also strengthened the work of the forestry schools at the universities of Washington and California, and from 1911 to 1917 was in charge of the purchase of lands for national forest operations in the White mountains of New England."

EASTERN FORESTS IMPORTANT
"At this time the government acquired 1,700,000 acres of land at the headwaters of some of the most important eastern streams," said Hall, "and the national forests of the East now form an important integral part of the national forest system."

During the war Hall assisted in organizing the Tenth and Twentieth engineers and was a major in training for overseas service upon the termination of the war. He will be in Portland for about a week.

Number 2 of a Series on "Know Portland and the Northwest."

PORTLAND

—the Largest Grain-Shipping Port on the Pacific Coast.

Tributary to an agricultural section of immense productivity, Portland occupies a strategic position in the grain world, particularly as regards the importing of wheat and its exportation as raw material, or in the form of flour.

The carload receipts during the year 1919 in Portland amounted to 14,147 carloads of wheat, oats, barley, flour and hay. These were divided as follows:

9,256,000 bushels of wheat
913,500 bushels of oats
687,960 bushels of barley
1,523,200 barrels of flour

During the last six months of 1919, Portland exported wheat and flour as follows:

Wheat to Europe—1,244,865 bushels
Flour to Europe, the Orient and Hawaii—1,468,062 barrels

The public grain elevator, located at the St. Johns dock, has a capacity of 1,000,000 bushels, and there are ample private facilities in addition. The daily output of the Portland mills is 7750 barrels of flour.

The bank and the community must work together for prosperity. If the experience of sixty years in the Pacific Northwest will be of advantage to grain growers, the Ladd & Tilton Bank offers business advice or information.
