

LODGE IS HOLDING FATE OF PARTY IN THE BALANCE

Republicans in Senate Have Senator Between Two Hot Fires in Treaty Fight; Crisis Impends.

By David Lawrence
(Copyright, 1920)

Washington, Jan. 27.—These are critical moments in the fate of the peace treaty in the United States senate. The opportunity before Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, leader of the Republican party, is without precedent or parallel. Pressed on the one side by the irrecconcilables, who demand the nullification of the League of Nations, and threatened on the other side by mild reservationists, who want a compromise effected, Lodge is steadily trying to hold both groups of Republicans and preserve party solidarity.

It gives some idea of the mess the senator has been going through from the beginning, his trials and tribulations, his embarrassments and setbacks in trying to steer his party over the most vexing question that has been interjected into American politics in a generation.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES
Senator Lodge has come to the crossroads. Either he or the so-called irrecconcilables, or bitter enders, comprising men like Senators Borah, Hiram Johnson, Brandegee, Knox, McCormick and others, are to interpret the position and duty of the Republican party on a question that may be an issue in the presidential campaign.

Senator Lodge is urged by forces outside of congress, men like Chairman Hayes of the Republican national committee, former Attorney General E. A. Tamm, Oscar Straus and former President Taft, not to commit the Republican party to any program that may mean the death of the peace treaty. He is, on the other hand, threatened by revolt and a third party if he does not side with the irrecconcilables.

HEARST REVOLT FORESEEN
It is perfectly possible that the influence of the Hearst newspapers will be thrown to the side of Senator Johnson if he makes an independent race for the presidency and that some of the elements in our population who have been fighting the peace treaty since it was counted upon to support the Republican party may be alienated from the Republican party. Regardless of how distasteful the political aspect may be, it is starting the leaders of both sides in the face.

For the present President Wilson is in the background. To many friends of the peace treaty he has seemed another kind of irrecconcilable. But his party has gone ahead without his sanction and entered into negotiations for a compromise, not only on the assumption that he will accept what they negotiate, but that public opinion will compel him to do so.

So Senator Lodge must choose between two groups. To many who have followed the treaty fight closely from the beginning, the choice he must naturally make is on the side of the treaty.

TREATY WILL PASS
Lodge debated with former President Lowell of Harvard and argued that he was for a league of nations, but with reservations. Those reservations were finally proposed in the senate and they failed because the Democrats were not satisfied. Yet, even those reservations were not supported by the Republican irrecconcilables. They said they would vote against the treaty with or without reservations; they would fight to the bitter end against the treaty with or without reservations; they would fight to the bitter end against the whole thing.

Senator Lodge, therefore, could afford to lose the support of these 10 or 12 Republicans and get enough of his own party and Democrats to put through the senate the compromise which now is being negotiated. The question of whether the president would accept or would come up separately and subsequently, if Mr. Wilson refused, the country would know definitely and finally where to place the responsibility.

And, unquestionably, the president would make clear his reasons in any case. But whether or not it has been necessary, the fact is the compromise which is being negotiated at present has been kept a confidential matter. The public doesn't know what has been conceded or added by either side. From the fact that the irrecconcilable Republicans have threatened to bolt the Republican party, it is known that Senator Lodge has made some concessions, but whether they are objectionable to those who really want to keep the treaty from being acted upon, is hard to say till the details are revealed.

Will Senator Lodge rise to the occasion and say that the Republican party does not object to a League of Nations properly safeguarded by reservations, which has been the position of prominent Republicans from the beginning? Or will Senator Borah and Senator Johnson prevail and thus actually become the true leaders of the Republican party in the senate?

Once inclined to the view that Senator Lodge will win out and will stand his guns simply because talk of revolt has not been heard before, and has amounted to nothing and while Senators Borah and Johnson might succeed, it is doubtful whether tried old party men like Senators Brandegee, McCormick, Fall, Knox and others in the irrecconcilable group would care to produce a split that might hand the Borah-Johnson coalition to the Democrats on a platter, very much as the Progressive revolt did in 1912. Compromise has been delayed 11 weeks, but the hour is at hand when the country will know finally if the treaty is to be gotten out of the way or forced into the campaign by both sides as a cloak to domestic questions of graver consequence. Flier Removed to Grave by Airplane; Is First in History

San Jose, Cal., Jan. 27.—With the propeller droning a dirge, a flower-laden casket bearing the body of Charles J. Abrams, airplane mechanic, was carried through the clouds Monday afternoon to Oak Hill cemetery. So far as is known, it was the first aerial burial in history.

Thousands of persons gathered in Garden City aviation park saw the aerocraft, draped in black with flowers covering the wings, soar to a height of 2000 feet. Its exact political content, to the Democrats on a platter, very much as the Progressive revolt did in 1912. TWO MEN CONFESS NUMEROUS THEFTS

Police Declare Prisoners Admit More Than Dozen Local Robberies, Obtaining $700.

Five burglaries and house looting involving several hundred dollars worth of loot of every description, varying from furs to fountain pens, were admitted by Rolla Donley, alias "Baldy" Schultz and George Miller, alias "Pinkie," according to an announcement Monday night by Lieutenant Jack Goltz.

who conducted the investigation. A quantity of clothing, jewelry and valuables of all kinds was recovered Monday by Inspectors Hyde, Abbott and Morak. Charges of larceny from a dwelling were placed against Donley and Miller.

BURGLARS SURPRISED
Donley was captured by Motorcycle Officers O'Halloran and Forkin, on January 20, at the home of Mrs. E. Calhoun, 550 Tillamook street. Mrs. Calhoun returned home late in the afternoon and seeing a light in her house called police headquarters. Surprised in their work, the two men ran. O'Halloran and Forkin gave chase and caught Donley after running a block. Donley was armed with a revolver, but owing to the quick work of the patrolmen, he was unable to get it into play soon enough to fire. His companion escaped.

Miller was arrested at Park and Yamhill streets by Inspectors Phillips, Tackberry, Helyer and Leonard last Friday.

The robberies admitted by the two men, according to the police, include the homes of A. Ambrose, 701 Clinton street, on January 18; Mrs. Anna Babcock, 475 Larrabee street, on January 19; G. W. Armstrong and J. P. Davis, 271 North Twenty-fifth street; W. M. Hubbard, 801 Savier street, and Mrs. E. Calhoun, 550 Tillamook street, on January 20.

The two men will be brought before Municipal Judge Roseman for a hearing today.

According to Lieutenant Goltz, Miller is now on parole from Salem for a conviction of larceny from a dwelling in Lincoln county. Goltz stated that Donley has served a term in the state penitentiary also.

Waldorf Astoria's Bar Closed for Good
London, Jan. 27.—G. N. Barnea, labor famous Waldorf-Astoria bar, where Wall street brokers gathered in the old days to discuss deals running into millions, is only a memory today. The furnishings were torn out Sunday and the work of transforming it into an annex to the dining room is now under way.

LAD OFFERS WOMAN DRINK; SHE WHACKS HIM WITH UMBRELLA

When Patrolman Leads Him Away to Jail, Her Sympathy Gets the Better of Anger.

Critical comments about women led to the arrest of Tom F. Murphy, 22, a university student, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, Monday night. Murphy and a friend were walking behind Mrs. L. E. Miles, Hotel Clifford, approaching the intersection of Morrison and Park streets, when according to the story, the two men began to make comments about the white furs worn by Mrs. Miles.

Mrs. Miles overlooked the remarks until Murphy asked her if she wouldn't like a drink, according to the story told the police. Without further ceremony, she whacked Murphy across the face with her umbrella and chased him around the automobiles parked by the curb.

Patrolman R. A. Pratt came to her assistance. After Murphy was captured by the policeman, Mrs. Miles asked him if he had learned anything by his experience.

"You bet I have," responded Murphy, rubbing the welt across his face. Mrs. Miles patted him on the back and told him she was sorry.

When Murphy arrived at the police station and a quart of whiskey was found in his pocket, Mrs. Miles' anger had calmed sufficiently for her sympathy to become dominant and she refused to prosecute.

Murphy told police it was not he, but his companion, who made the remarks which aroused Mrs. Miles' anger. Charges of violating the prohibition law were preferred by Patrolman Pratt. The other young critic was not molested.

During the fracas he is said to have stood by, calling to his unfortunate companion to stand up and take his medicine.

Murphy was released on $250 bail.

Woman Wins Her Suit Against City
Suit of Mrs. Clara Bell Lammer to quiet title to property on the old Macadam road south of Porter street was won Monday when Federal Judge Wolverson handed down a decision against the City of Portland. It was alleged that the city took the property when it acquired the old Macadam road in 1888.
