SPORTSMAN EDITOR URGES ELIMINATION OF ALL NET FISHING

"But an end to all net fishing for salmon." This slogan was sounded by H. C. Copeland, editor of Western Sportsman, when he came to Portland this morning.

"Sportsmen in Seattle, Tacoma, Aberdeen, Hopium and Portland are taking up the proposal to save the remainder of the salmon run as an asset to the development of tourist travel that will be thousands of dollars where commercial fishing and packing is worth hundreds," he said.

"The elimination of net fishing is also necessary for a period of several years, at least, in order to save our most valuable salmon species. The dog salmon, for example, are not apparently threatened by extinction but that is because they are inferior fish and fewer of them are caught.

"I do not mean to say that there is a movement to prevent commercial salmon fishing with hook and line. But I believe that it would be worth more for commercial fishermen to organize boating service for tourists, taking them out and teaching them to catch salmon with light tackle than to continue selling their catch merely to the packers.

"Salmon fishing restricted entirely to hook and line would mean the increase of the Chinook, silver and sockeye varieties and bring the annual runs of these wonderful fish back to what they were in the days before 'hog fishing' began.

"I am sure that unless the nets are eliminated the salmon will take their place in extinction with the buffalo, the passenger pigeon and the great auk. I hope that some day there will be 100 salmon left and some of the commercial fishermen were given access to them, they would catch them for canning and permit them to spawn and save the species."

FORCED SALE OF SHIPS IS STOPPED

Washington, April 22.—(WASH. BUREAU OF THE JOURNAL)—The sub-committee of the senate committee met at Senator Simmons' country home last night and after midnight reached final results on features of a bill they will submit for approval of the entire committee.

By a vote of four to three, the provision directing sale of government ships within 10 years was stricken out. This leaves the period of government ownership and operation indefinite with instructions to the shipping board to dispose of the vessels in accordance with good business, acting as a prudent man who is not compelled to sell. By a vote of five to two provision were approved authorizing the shipping board to construct new vessels from the proceeds of operations and sales. Other parts of the bill are virtually unchanged from the tentative draft heretofore published. Chamberlain and McNary both are members of the subcommittee and participated in last night's final decision, furnishing the votes needed to defeat the proposals directing the quick sale of the merchant fleet, which they believe unfavorable to the development of permanent shipping and particularly unprofitable to ports like the Columbia river, which are building up under the plan of assignments to capable operators. The entire commerce committee will pass on the bill before it is reported to the senate.
