

WILSON TO MAKE TREATY OF PEACE CAMPAIGN ISSUE

By David Lawrence

Washington, April 22.—President Wilson is to make the treaty of peace the dominant issue of the campaign. Whether a candidate or not, Wilson will fight to have the American people endorse his stand. For the present, therefore, the treaty will not go back to the senate unless, of course, there is some change of heart in the senate or some situation in Europe which alters the whole face of things.

But the overshadowing issue will be the treaty—a vote for the Republican ticket will be a vote against the peace treaty. That is the Democratic strategy. That is what the Democratic campaign orators are going to say, notwithstanding the protests of Republican spellbinders that they want the treaty with reservations and Wilson blocked the way.

EVENTS AHEAD WATCHED
If the American people defeat the Democratic party on that issue, the president's next move would unquestionably be to withdraw American participation from Europe and from that would logically follow another peace negotiation by the next president-elect, either a separate peace or an entrance into the league with reservations.

But while it will be the aim of the Republican party to keep the American people concentrated on domestic issues, the Democrats, led by the president, will blame all the economic and business ills of the country on the failure of the senate to ratify the treaty.

In the meantime the president is taking upon his own shoulders the determination of American foreign policy. American ambassadors abroad have been instructed to act as "observers" at all international conferences.

SENATE ACTION FINAL
Foreign governments will know that this is merely a temporary expedient while the American people thresh out the differences between two branches of the government who have coordinate jurisdiction over the making of peace treaties.

This decision has been reached by the president and his official family and is reflected in the point of view expressed by members of the cabinet.

"Why not send the treaty back to the senate for further consideration, as there is nothing now before the senate," was the query which the writer directed to a member of the cabinet after this week's cabinet meeting.

"Because the senate sent it back to the White House without action and with the statement that the treaty could not pass," was the reply.

Now it is futile to think of negotiating a new treaty with powers who already have ratified it and have put it into operation. The president worked out a treaty which embodied his concept of American ideals. It was approved by representatives of foreign governments, after many of them had made concessions to the American viewpoint. Some of them would be quite willing to recall these concessions in a new negotiation.

"But the American people constitute the court of last resort. They will decide whose concept of Americanism is right. If they do not sustain the president or the Democratic platform, the next administration will have the unpleasant task of going to Germany and making a separate peace, as well as straightening out the mix-up in foreign relations brought about by the failure of the treaty negotiated at Versailles to be approved by the senate."

SIGNS HELD FAVORABLE

Therefore, the White House will strive to see that the Democratic national convention adopts a platform embodying the president's ideas.

Reports from the Georgia primaries indicating the success of Attorney General Palmer is viewed by the White House as another sign of the continued supremacy of the Wilson ideals in the ranks of the Democratic voters.

The treaty may seem a dead issue, but it is to be revived by the Democrats as the paramount question of the campaign. Unless the senate shall petition the White House for another opportunity to vote on the treaty, it will remain in the hands of the executive, while he waits the wishes of the American people, as expressed at the polls.

To the argument that it will be difficult to tell what the people are voting on because of the complexity of issues on Democratic affairs, members of the cabinet say everything else will be subordinated to the treaty, and the result will be accepted as an instruction or mandate from the people on the pact itself.

Action is based on the contention that Multnomah and not Josephine county is the principal place of business of the concern, and that therefore, appointment of Burley as receiver by the Josephine county court is illegal.
