

Mann was seeking a divorce from Arlie Mann on the ground of desertion. His testimony was heard in the form of questions and answers. Mann was called, and she said that $10 a month would be sufficient to help him take care of the child. Harold Eugene Mann protested that he was willing to take the child himself but unwilling to pay money to Mrs. Mann for his support. The court ordered that the divorce be granted. The court raised the order to a payment of $15 a month.

In questioning Mrs. Mann, the court asked if it were true, as alleged, that she had thrown a $50 vase at her husband. She replied, with asperity, "You did, and everything else I could get my hands on, as I considered he hurt me."

A black and white illustration of a parlor interior. On the left, a woman in a dress sits on a bench, playing a large upright piano. A potted palm tree stands to the left of the piano. In the center, another woman in a long dress sits on a chaise longue, looking towards the piano. A small round table with a fruit basket sits between them. On the right, a large, ornate stove with its door open stands next to a fireplace mantel. The room is decorated with wall sconces and a large mirror. Below the illustration, the text "New $800 1919 Model" is printed.
