

RUSSIAN NOBLES IN GERMAN COLONY SLOWLY STARVING

Alten Grabow, Germany, April 29.
Here in the heart of the orchard country, where the hillsides glow with the bloom of apple and peach trees and the air is heavy with the perfume of millions of blossoms is a colony of human beings whose misery it is hard to depict. It consists of 4000 Russians, most of whom fought against the Bolsheviks with Colonel Avaloff-Bermondot, General Yudenitch and General von der Goltz. Besides these soldiers there are 300 women and 64 children between the ages of 3 and 15.

All are starving. All are without proper clothing. All are in danger of being carried off by an epidemic which could not be stopped once it gained a foothold, because there are virtually no drugs, medicines or disinfectants in the camp.

NOBILITY IN SHACKS
I came here with the permission of the German government to make a full inspection of the camp in company with Prince Nicholas Kropotkin, who is doing his utmost to alleviate the sufferings of his countrymen now detained in Germany. With me went into details I will set down the most important features. The camp is commanded by General Alfater, a Russian, under the supervision of Major Rosenbaum, a German. There are 2500 soldiers and 1000 officers in addition to the women and children. They are crowded into barracks which once formed a German artillery camp. Among the women are two princesses, four countesses and eight baronesses. There is also the wife of a man who was mayor of Riga for 18 years.

The ration which is all that Germany can give, is as follows: At 8 a. m. imitation coffee, thin and nasty, about a pint to each person; at noon a pint to each of vegetable soup; at 4 p. m. another portion of coffee. One loaf of the most awful black bread I have ever seen is issued to each person every four days. This is the entire ration on which these human beings are trying to exist. It applies to children as well as grownups, except in the case of very young children, who are given diluted milk in such pitiful quantities as to be almost negligible. Once a week, however, an allowance of 17 ounces of meat for each is available, but it is had in quality and there is so little of it that it can only be put in the soup, where it makes little difference. Fortnightly issues of grease and jam in lots of 7 ounces completes the menu.

BEAUTY BECOMES HAGGARD
It must be remembered that these people are not accustomed to poverty. They are largely refined and educated men and women who have been plunged into disaster with a suddenness that was overwhelming. I talked with Princess Mikkewsky, formerly of the government of Kaluga. She appears to be not more than 25 years of age and must once have been very pretty. But suffering has left her face terribly haggard and her tattered clothing does the rest. She as well as others came to Germany without a farthing or more clothes than she wore. Her best outfit consisted of a tattered sweater, a flimsy shirt waist, ragged skirt and one suit of underclothing. She has no shoes or stockings, but only a pair of frayed carpet slippers. All about the camp are women and children with feet wound around their stockings.

The wife of Colonel Piasetky, General Alfater's aide, is in charge of the women and children. She was delighted when I told her that American and English women in Berlin had collected 5000 marks (normally $1250) with which to buy cloth in order that the 40 women who have no underclothing whatever can make their own garments. This they will do within the next few days. Through the kindness of American men in Berlin I was able to furnish a substantial luncheon for all the children here today. The Germans, who are evidently doing their best, were most courteous, obliging and anxious to help us obtain information. They deserve credit because the Russians had no other

WHERE CAN ALLIES GET REQUIRED MEN?

San Remo, Italy, April 19.—(Delayed.)—With President Wilson's note on Turkey before their eyes three premiers are considering this morning their reply in which will be seen the attitude of the allies towards the United States. This in substance will say that power implies responsibility and that the United States refuses responsibility. Even with America unrepresented, the world's business proceeds and the European premiers, therefore, without disregarding President Wilson's point of view, are united in insisting that the Turk remain in Europe and the caliph reside in Constantinople with territory bounded on the west either by the Enos-Midis or the Tchataldja line.

In these some modification of the treaty in Bulgaria's favor is possible, so that Bulgaria may obtain an outlet to the Egean. The powers regret that Trebizond is necessary to Asiatic Turkey (which has already been divided into zones of exploitation), and hence cannot be assigned to Armenia. They are willing, however, to concede to Armenia the use of the port as a commercial outlet. Aside from these changes the treaty stands. The allies are now considering measures necessary for taking control over the Dardanelles and enforcing the treaty terms. Among these are the occupation of the peninsula of Gallipoli by allied forces and the reduction of the Turkish army. Tomorrow the voices of the military and naval experts will be heard. Interest is heightened by the presence here of the Turkish nationalist, Ghalib Khamal Bey, and the Armenian, Nubar Pasha.

As in many previous cases, the peace delegates seem to be planning "outside the reality." The reality in this instance—and no consent on the part of the Constantinople government can modify it—is conveyed in Marshal Foch's statement that 300,000 soldiers will be necessary to enforce the treaty against the wishes of the already practically annexed Syrians and Mesopotamians and the desperate resolve of the Turkish nation to resist. Do the allies know where these soldiers can be found?

GERMAN FORCE IN NEUTRAL ZONE BIG

Frankfurt on the Main, April 18.—(Delayed.)—Early this morning the 37th division of French troops left and was replaced by the seventh under General Vidalon. The people of Frankfurt hardly knew of the change until the last supply train left town about 10 a. m. In the afternoon there was a scene of animation before the Hotel Imperial. General De Metz was leaving by automobile with his staff for Mayence and General Vidalon was standing at salute. The departing division took care to leave everything in good order, four soldiers staying until the last minute. Sleeping rooms in the hotel were used as an office. With the 37th all the Senegalese soldiers left, greatly to the satisfaction of the citizens. The city has now settled down to the ordinary life of a garrison town in the occupied territory. The streets are lively with horizon blue and khaki of the French and Belgian uniforms. The tea rooms and dances are frequented by officers and the theatres, operas and parks are crowded. French army officers seem to think that the Berlin government will try to recall the troops from the neutral zone now that the Germans see the allies supporting France in demanding the fulfillment of the treaty. However, the French are afraid that Berlin has lost control of the reichswehr and hence that evacuation is uncertain. I was told that in the opinion of the French their troops would evacuate Frankfurt if the neutral zone were evacuated or the number of German soldiers there were reduced, according to treaty stipulations.
