But Hill managed to obtain the site of the present North Bank station at Tenth and Hoyt streets. Then came the building of the S., P. & S. by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific empanies after Hill had obtained control of the latter.

CENTRAL OREGON MAGNET

In 1913 came another mad scramble between the Hill and Harriman factions to enter Central Oregon. The S., P. & S., under the administration of Hill, built a line up one side of the Deschutes canyon toward Bend, while the O-W. R. & N., under the guidance of Harriman, pushed its line up the other side of the river. In the race toward Bend as a goal the two factions made a profligate expenditure of money, the S., P. & S. placing about $11,000,000 in the building operation, and the O-W. about follows: With duplicate lines now extending government operation still reminding the railroads that expenditures in operation can be cut enormously to Bend, the railroads are attempting to reach an agreement on this matter. TO REDUCE TRACKAGE

Demand for a highway which could nake use of one of these roadbeds and the call for extension of a line south to Klamath Falls lends added strength to the necessity of forgetting old enmitties. It is proposed that 78 miles of the O-W. trackage from Sherman to North Junction and 23 miles of S., P. & S., track-Major General Leonard Wood received age from South Junction to Metolius be removed.

This removal of trackage would mean a detraction of $3,000,000 from the original investment of the S., P. & S., and about $4,500,000 from the investment of the O-W., unless the tracks were utilized in further extension work. The matters of investment and future business create to end of problems according to some of the railroad officials.

With Gray now the executive head of the Union Pacific system it was thought that an agreement could be more readily reached. Gray formerly served as president of the S., P. & S., and Great North ern, recently switching to the opposing faction.

Adjournment was finally called at 7:30 o'clock.

Gray left for Seattle Thursday evening and expects to return to the city Mon-day. Dyer and Burckhalter left for the South at 8 p. m.
