"Happy Jack" was a well known fisherman on the lower river in the days when gill netting was the popular method of taking salmon. It was said that he had been wrecked more times than any living human. Jack's boat landed in the breakers at Peacock Spit. It overturned and the boat puller was drowned. Captain Brown and the Fort Canby coast guard started to the rescue. Arriving they discovered "Happy Jack" standing on the bottom of the overturned boat attempting to execute a hornpipe and squawking a chantey at the top of his voice. He was rescued.
