Suicide Minutely Planned, but He Stops to Think

Prosser, Wash., May 21.—(U. P.)—Enter: The complete suicide. When H. R. Kendrick, deputy county auditor, decided to quit the world he made all possible arrangements in advance. Letters to the sheriff and other county officials told of his intention and plans.

A handkerchief, tied to a post on the river bank, gave the location of the proposed act. To this end was tied a long rope. The other end was fastened to Kendrick's waist "to save trouble in grappling for my body," the would-be suicide explained.

When the rescue party found Kendrick he was seated on the river bank. Stacks of rocks were tied to his legs and his hands were handcuffed. He was having a final think before jumping in. They led Kendrick back to town and the county commissioners fired him a couple of hours later.

Man Against Whom Girl Filed Charges Of Assault Freed

Spokane, Wash., May 20.—(U. P.)—Lack of force and conviction in the state's case resulted late yesterday in a verdict of acquittal for Al C. Cartmill, charged with criminal assault upon Nora Logsdon, laundry worker. The girl charged Cartmill with taking her to a lonely spot in Indian canyon on the outskirts of the city near here and assaulting her.

Evidence showed that the girl had three opportunities to leave unharmed the car in which she rode with Cartmill and another couple to the lonely spot. The state failed to establish a struggle claimed by the girl to have taken place.

Bring Your Boy to Cherry's Saturday

CHERRY CHAT
You want your boy to dress well, of course—the appearance of a child is a direct reflection on the parents. And it influences the child's character. Cultivate in your boy a worthy sense of pride—let him hold his head up among the best children in his school. To do so he must have clothes of which he will not be ashamed.

Cherry's terms make it possible for all parents to dress their children neatly dressed. And the clothes have the good wearing qualities necessary for economical buying.
