THE Stroller notices

THAT we have been so busy for the last 24 hours that we haven't had time to notice much but that there was an election.

That election nights and the following day are always strenuous times in newspaper offices.

That the early returns are always late in coming in.

That they don't tell very much when they do come.

That there are always scores of people who call up as soon as the polls close, to find out "Who's elected?"

That some candidates passed a restless night.

That our toothbrush and Gillette are all packed.

That we'll soon be on our way.

That we hope our berth won't be just above the wheels.

That it's going to seem queer not to have to write a "column" every day.

That the L. W. and the Tiffin and the Littlest One and the folks have a busy time mixed out for us.

That we'll leave Jerry in good hands.

That we don't want you all to forget us.

That some of our mail is still unanswered.

That we trust you'll keep our mailbox busy while we're away.

That we bid you farewell, but not good-bye—for two weeks.

That we wish you all health and happiness and prosperity and contentment—until we meet again—forever and ever.

Star Vaudeville Program to Be Given for Shrine

Twelve headline acts, the pick of the acts at the Orpheum, Hippodrome, Pantages and Lyric theatres this week, will compose the program at the annual vaudeville revue given at the Helix Wednesday night by the theatre managers of Portland to raise funds with which to entertain visitors during the Shrine convention in June. The managers of the various theatres are all cooperating to make this the biggest vaudeville show ever staged in Portland.

Frank Coffinberry will select the acts as soon as the vaudeville programs for next week are definitely known. He has been invited by the various managers to step in and select any acts desired, and he promises to use his best judgment in picking the best from each theatre. The Helix has been donated for the occasion and arrangements have been made for elaborate decorations, an augmented orchestra and some novel features, including a special musical show by the Lyric band.

The managers of the principal theatres have come together on several occasions in recent years and put on vaudeville programs for charity or patriotic causes and each show has been a little better than the one before it. Frank Coffinberry is making a special effort this time to make the show the best. This ambition probably will be realized because of the fact that the vaudeville program in all the houses next week are exceptionally good.

JOHNNY CHUCK EXPLAINS SOME MATTERS

By Thornton W. Burgess

"What's good for you for others may work out in quite the other way."

FOR that reason, it never does to insist that another shall do this or that just because you like it. It would no more do for Johnny Chuck to try to stay awake through the winter than to sleep all day for Peter Rabbit to try to sleep all day for the other.

Jumping the Hare had a question for Johnny Chuck. "Are your babies born down in that little bedroom of yours under ground?" he asked.

"Of course," replied Johnny Chuck. "Where else would you expect them to be?"

"I didn't know but that Mrs. Chuck might make a nest for them on the ground the way Mrs. Peter often does and Mrs. Jumper always does," replied Johnny very meekly.

"No siree!" replied Johnny. "Our babies are born in that little underground bedroom and they stay down there until they are big enough to be able to hunt food for themselves."

"What's in it for you, usually have?" inquired Chatterbox the Red Squirrel. "Six or eight," replied Johnny Chuck. "I believe in large families."

"Do you eat like the rest of the Squirrel family?" inquired Striped Chipmunk.

"No," replied Johnny. "Give me green food every day. I like to eat things as good as tender sweet clover and young grass, unless it be some of those fine vegetables Farmer Brown grows in his garden."

Peter Rabbit nodded in approval. "You said something," said he.

"There is a supposition you are what is called a vegetarian," said Happy Jack to which Johnny replied that he supposed he was. "And I suppose that is why you sleep all winter," added Happy Jack.

"If I didn't I would starve," responded Johnny Chuck promptly. "When it gets near for Jack Frost I stuff and stuff and stuff on the last of the good things until I am so fat I can hardly waddle. Then I go down in my bedroom, curl up in my bed and go to sleep. Colds, snow and ice don't worry me a bit."

"I know," spoke up Striped Chipmunk. "I sleep most of the winter myself. Of course I have a lot of food stored away down in my house, and once in a while I wake up and eat a little. Do you ever wake up in the winter, Johnny Chuck?"

"No," replied Johnny. "I sleep right through, thank goodness. Sometimes I wake up early in the spring before all the snow is gone, earlier than I wish."

Risser Here Ahead Of "Passing Show"

Felix Risser, business representative of "The Passing Show," for Messrs. Lee and J. J. Shubert, is in Portland as Manager Pangle of the Helix, arranging for the Portland production of the "big stuff" June 3, 4 and 5. Risser reports splendid business for the "show" all along the route, and says it is by far the most pretentious of attractions now on the coast. The Helix and Eugene Howard are featured again, and Risser also places special emphasis on the work of some new comedians with the company.

Clyde Westover, president of the San Francisco Press club, has been added to the scenario department of Fox Film corporation. His first Fox picture will be "The Scuttlers," in which William Farnum will be the star.

Graham Baker, associate editor of the Vitaphone scenario department, recently completed the production of special vehicles for Alice Joyce and Corinne Griffith. "The Vice of Pools," by Francis James, will have Miss Joyce as the star, and Miss Griffith will be seen in "The Whisper Market," by W. E. Scott. These are the first scenarios written by Mr. Baker since the Columbia Shingle company and the Columbia Shingle company will have Earle Williams as scoring great success.

Among Vitaphone features to be released in May are Alice Joyce in "Dolores" and "The Woman," Larry Semon in "School Days" and Harry T. Morey in "The Sea Rider."

Oregon Needs More Free Books

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Approximately 40 per cent of the population of Oregon does not have access to free public libraries, representing almost 300,000 persons not provided with free library service, according to the estimate of the United States bureau of education, made public today.

American Library association officials declare that this lack, as revealed by statistics of public library development recently compiled by P. F. Claxton, commissioner of education, will give residents of Oregon a conception of the benefit to be derived from the "Books for everybody" movement launched by the association. To devote to the task of making public library service a vital influence in every American community, the American Library association is gathering a "books for everybody" fund of $2,000,000. John B. Kaiser, librarian of the public library of Tacoma, Wash., is regional director for the "books for everybody" fund in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

REPORT FOR OREGON

The report for Oregon shows 54 libraries that are classified as public libraries, containing 266,180 volumes and serving a population of 396,850 persons, leaving 276,306 persons without access to libraries. In the judgment of the bureau of education, the smallest library that can usually be depended on to render an adequate service is one of 500 volumes. Only 10 libraries in the state, measured by this standard, can be termed "universities of the people." They serve 24,226 persons, with 34,539 persons practically deprived of the help of an institution which, more than any other, promotes adult self education. In 25 counties there is no library with as many as 500 volumes.

The county library law enacted by the Oregon legislature paves the way for the Oregon library service recently advocated by Commissioner Claxton and endorsed by the American Library association as the best method of circulating good reading matter through the rural districts. A number of county libraries which are now in operation in Oregon are among the most successful in the United States.

More Books Essential. In commenting on the results of the bureau of education's survey, American Library association officials point out that the very development of the last several years, under the guidance of the highly efficient Oregon state library, may be too recent to be taken fully into account. While revised population statistics would show a much larger population served by existing libraries, as the completion is based on the 1910 census, it is indicated, however, that the growth of population in the wide areas without public library service probably would tend to keep the percentages, as announced by the bureau of education, nearly constant.

In view of the rapid industrial development which is bringing Oregon an increasing number of new Americans from foreign shores who must depend largely upon public libraries to give them their education in the American language, institutions and ideals, the general need for library facilities throughout the state is declared to present a serious situation. It is planned to make this playhouse the finest one in Idaho.

Naval Reserve Plans Cruise During Summer

THE Oregon Naval militia that had too many young men of Portland in it prior to the entry of the United States into the World war, will be perpetuated in the form of a naval reserve which includes preparatory training as well as to include the veterans. There are nearly 4000 members of the Naval reserve in Oregon, most of them in Washington. A large number of them will participate in a naval cruise in July. A cruiser has been asked for, with Honolulu as the objective port, the trip to continue over three weeks. The last cruise of the Oregon naval militia was in 1915 when the Marblehead, conducted, nearly 300 youths of Portland to Sitka and return. Among the officers of that contingent a number are still in the service of the United States navy. Captain F. B. Blair, who commanded the Oregon naval militia at that time, is at Norfolk, Va., in command of the construction and repair division of the south Atlantic. Lieutenant George H. and Lieutenant E. H. Le Tourneau are stationed in New York in important positions. Lieutenant C. J. Dwyer is now commander of one of the 800-ton ships of the United States merchant marine running between New York and China, and Paymaster George E. Dwyer is with him. There was considerable fun made of the play sailors before the entry into the war and it was freely asserted that the lads were too young to go to sea. The officers were too young to go to sea. The officers were too young to go to sea. The officers were too young to go to sea.

When the boys went to sea they made good, every one of them. Many became commissioned officers. The commissioned officers were advanced and Oregon's sailor lads delivered the goods in every position they were assigned and materially helped to drive the German piratical submarines off the sea.

Permits for Killing Robins Passed Up To Federal Heads

Requests filed with the state fish and game commission for permits to kill robins for the purpose of raising the birds which damage cherry and strawberry crops in the state will be referred to the department of agriculture for action under the federal migratory bird act, according to A. E. Burghdoff, state game warden.

Burghdoff is also making the request of the federal government that if permits are issued they require that the birds killed be forwarded to the headquarters of the game commission. Burghdoff believes that the sale and the practice of using permits to kill wild pigeons and pheasants which are not menacing crops, for food.
