

TRIBUTE PAID TO GRAVES OF ALL HEROES IN FRANCE

By Edwin Hullinger (United News Staff Correspondent.) Paris, May 31.—The Stars and Stripes and the tri-color of France flew side by side Friday over every American grave in France, while doughboys and poilus performed the military honors in a great Memorial day observance by the French nation.

There were detachments from the army of occupation at most of the cemeteries, but there were a few remote burial grounds which the American troops could not reach, and over these graves detachments of poilus fired volleys for their comrades in arms.

RETURN FROM GERMANY From every corner of France came reports today of a great national tribute to the Americans which made it seem almost as though France had overcome for the moment the pang of losing nearly 2,000,000 of her own sons, to devote her whole heart to the 70,000 crusaders from overseas.

General Allen, commanding the Americans on the Rhine, sent every available soldier back into France in detachments to visit the various scattered cemeteries. The principal ceremonies were at Suresnes, where Ambassador Wallace and Marshal Petain, commander in chief of the French armies, delivered addresses in memory of the dead, followed by a volley from a platoon from the Rhine. General Allen spoke amid the beautifully kept graves at Romagne and the regimental band of the Fifteenth Infantry played.

CHILDREN LOVE AMERICANS General Frank Parker was the speaker at Ploisy, General John O'Ryan at Bony, Colonel Cabot Ward at Beaumont, Admiral Hulse at Belleau wood, and Colonel Stan and Major Pochet at Chateau Thierry.

Other ceremonies were at Touz, Thincourt, Fere-en-Tardenois, Fleury, Nesles, Chateau, Contrexeville, Vitteux, LaMans, St. Nazaire, Dijon, Is-sur-Tille, Langres, Reims, Chalons-sur-Marne, Tours, Nevers, Meaux, St. Maixent, Juvisy, Bordeaux, Marsailles, Le Havre, La Rochelle, Nantes and Lyons.

At every ceremony the French people turned out in thousands, trading along dusty roads to bare their heads and pray over the graves of their American friends. It was noteworthy that children were so numerous, almost every child carrying a wreath furnished by the Red Cross or a simple bouquet of wild flowers plucked in the woods and fields over which the Americans toiled and fought.

SOLDIERS REMEMBERED The Red Cross in Paris mobilized a motor convoy system which carried most of the American colony to the nearby cemeteries.

At Brest, besides decorating the graves, the French erected a huge memorial cenotaph to the American sailors buried there. At Marselles the merchant sailors in port joined the American colony in the ceremonies at the request of the G. A. R., and Cleveland Cox placed a wreath on the La Fayette memorial.

More than 1,000,000 francs was raised by the Paris American colony, which was spent for more than 70,000 wreaths, or one to a grave. The wreaths were distributed in time for the services. Nor were the graves in Belgium, Luxembourg and along the Rhine neglected, for the American committee had forethought of them.

Throughout France the ceremonies were official, the government having ordained a national observance to consecrate the friendship of the two countries. Cardinal Lucien of Rheims requested his people to offer their prayers for the intention of the Americans.

FLOWERS MAKE STATE The scene at Suresnes cemetery caused the eyes of many disciplined soldiers to blink with tears.

Three battalions of French infantry, four cavalry squadrons and two batteries joined the detachment of doughboys down from the Rhineland in paying homage to the fellows who died for the great cause.

Thousands of Americans came to the ceremonies, but they were assimilated by the great multitude of French people who trudged to the little graveyard atop the high promontory dominating the Bois de Boulogne. It was an indelible picture—these fervent thousands standing under the towering pure white plaster figure of a doughboy rising from a plinth of flowers laid there wreath by wreath.

"TAPS" ENDS CEREMONY President Deschanel's card was among those to be read on the wreaths heaped at the foot of the silent doughboy monument which stood relaxed with rifle at the trail and a flicker of a smile on the handsome features, faithfully watching the sleep of his buddies.

The background was a grove along whose edges the drawn sabres and burnished cuirasses of the cavalry gleamed in the sun. And down the slope, like lilies, the white crosses glowed on the green, each wreathed in the tri-color and the Stars and Stripes.

Handkerchiefs hid many eyes as the last volley cracked across the valley and a bugler at the base of the statue blew "Taps."

FOLLOW THEIR LEAD The French girls have not forgotten their friends, the Americans, for I saw many of them kneeling before the white crosses, praying devoutly or arranging bunches of flowers on the mounds, as the column of steel helmeted French troops moved away down the hill at the close of the ceremonies.

"The heroes who lie there," said Marshal Petain in his address, "are not in exile, for France is their second motherland. She loves them and she comes to pay them homage today as though they were her own sons."

"We cannot add to the honor won by these men who died on the field of honor," said Ambassador Wallace, "but we can learn from their example and rededicate ourselves to the tasks of the peace which they died to gain."

BRITAIN REMEMBERS 2000 AMERICANS BURIED THERE By A. E. Johnson (United News Staff Correspondent.) London, May 31.—Great British Sunday bowed in a spirit of reverence for the 2000 American dead soldiers, sailors and marines and the 30 Lusitania victims who lie buried in various parts of the island.

It was an Anglo-American Memorial day service which in London filled Saint Margaret's Westminster with British and Americans of all ranks of society under the auspices of the American societies.

Everywhere the graves were neat and beautifully cared as a result of careful tending which has not relaxed since the expedition sailed for home.
