While it is believed in some quarters that the extreme low price for wheat at refining centers has about been reached and that one refinery is quoting only about half the last advanced quote by another, still none of this high priced sugar has as yet reached the consumer.

After the sterilized jars are filled with good, selected fresh fruit, the jars to be covered with the sterilized rubber stopper and cap in position on the jar, screw down so that it just touches the vacuum and will not injure the contents.

Further lowering of apple estimates is generally shown. Latest reports from the orchards show that while it is yet too early to make any definite statement concerning the damage to fruit during the unexpected freeze of December last, sufficient is already known to convince most orchardists that the going is to be considerably below that of the year.

On the whole, the crop is a whole, with the 1920 crop estimated at 1,000,000 bushels. The damage so far disclosed appears to be most heavy in the older orchards on the east side of the river, and in certain areas well defined areas where poor water drainage and lack of air circulation permitted the extremely low temperatures of from 20 to 25 below zero to continue for unusually extended periods.

Other trees killed. While the majority of peach trees were killed, a number are now showing out new wood at a point where the snow has melted. The few trees that were not killed are showing new wood and are expected to bear a crop next year.
