

YACHTING CREWS RACING TORAL

By James B. Connolly (Copyright, 1930, United News) New York, July 23.—All the weather sharks upland said there would be wind off Sandy Hook today, but when our destroyers slipped in there just before starting time it was a cold fog rolling off the ocean...

But the fog rolled by, and after an hour's postponement it was time to start the race, and across the line went the racers in the usual light air, and with the green boat getting her usual start—that is, to leeward and behind the Resolute.

SHAMROCK CREEPS UP

After the Shamrock got going it was a pretty race to first mark, which had been placed 10 miles to windward, placed not out to sea as it might have been by the committee, but in love with Jersey shore.

ABOUT 12 KNOTS

Both boats were making a very pretty picture for that five miles, and the entire 10 miles in fact, with the swash flying past them and the boat tucked in close to the windward rail, where they hung on like people on a sloping roof—they had to hang on or slide overboard, and if they slid overboard the boat they could hope for was a hastily flung life preserver.

TRIES TO CROSS FIRST

Now the run home was where the Shamrock was to show what a wonder she was. The wind was over her quarter and over her quarter it was, and with her green top sides buried under water—all the ugly bumps in her hull—she brought every foot of her long length to bear and she did it well.

NO JOB TOPSAIL

If either boat showed distress under the strain it should be the Resolute, because hadn't she been all year preparing her throat halcyons or carrying away her mast or something? But it was not the Resolute that was in trouble. Hereafter, all there must be some consolation in beating your opponent out in actual sailing.

NO JOB TOPSAIL

This time the breeze was about 13 miles an hour, the strongest it had blown during any race of this series, and five miles from the start it was safe bet that the Shamrock would cross the line first.

RESOLUTE GETS WIND

By and by a black squall came up. Everybody ducked and Destroyers, steam down wheelhouse windows and about yachts hoisted to as the racing boats came into the wind. The Resolute acted as she had started something when it was past. She pointed into the wind.

But the Resolute was not so, and while she hung so, the long green boat crept up on her. She came abreast of her to leeward and we all thought she was going to slip by. If the stake boat had not been so near we would have feared for the cup, the Shamrock having a lead of three minutes and a minute never got by.
