Curtiss Seagull Loses Balance Above Willamette River and Dives Nose First Into Water.

Pilot Fred Dupuy and Two Passengers, Dr. Joseph Pettit and Joseph Ehrman, Escape Unhurt

A big Curtiss Seagull airplane with Pilot Fred Dupuy in charge, and Joseph Ehrman, of Mason, Ehrman & Co., and Dr. Joseph A. Pettit, well known Portland physician, as passengers, lost its balance Saturday afternoon when it ran into bumpy air currents and dived nose first into the Willamette river with its human freight from an original altitude of 250 feet.

Plane and pilot and occupants went down to a great depth. Dupuy clung to his ship and his passengers hung on for dear life to the wings, and when the plane came up again all three persons were safe and sound. In the dip Dr. Pettit's nose and lips were slightly bruised.

BOUND FOR SEASIDE

Ehrman and Pettit had arranged with the Oregon, Washington & Idaho Airplane company for an air trip to Seaside. Pilot Dupuy was assigned by Manager Victor Vernon to drive the big plane, and the aerial epaulet took off from Lewis and Clark field at 1:50. Dupuy at once encountered a strong southerly wind, which made difficult an ascent in the usual manner, and so he headed into the Willamette from Guide Island started up stream for a start. Gradually lifting from the water, the plane reached an altitude of 250 feet when Dupuy started to turn the turn so as to head down stream and then seaward.

AIR CURRENTS BUMPY

The air currents sweeping over the hillsides and whipping the big bulge developed many "bumps," as Dupuy speedily discovered. He found one wing tilted too much because the turbulence of the air had made the craft "slipping." Finding it impossible to right the plane, he put on all speed possible, hoping that the added momentum would lift the lower plane, but this failed and the craft started dropping. All the time the pilot was shouting "Make it right off" and the hour of 5 a. m. today was decided on.

The men had demanded unlimited arbitration and increase in wages and change in working conditions. For weeks a strike has seemed imminent and committees from both the employed union and the company had endeavored to reach an agreement. Receiver Lindley has insisted that the company meet the demands, but agreed to meet the committee to discuss a way out of the difficulties.

By David Lawrence (Copyright, 1920, by The Journal)

Thousands lined every street along which Cox passed and cheered him. At the Grosvenor racetrack he spoke before a crowd estimated at 200,000.

The governor wound up his strenuous day by attending a dinner of party leaders given by former Representative John J. Fitzgerald in Brooklyn.

Cox's attack on the Republican campaign fund was praised by William G. McAdoo, speaking at the banquet.

Noses Detect Liquor Odor; Still Raided

Still Located in Dugout, Large Quantity of Moonshine Is Seized; Two Arrested.

60 GALLONS FOUND

Favorable winds and a keen sense of smell enabled Federal Prohibition Agents E. R. Wolfe and M. T. Burnett to discover late Saturday afternoon the largest illicit whiskey still found so far in the state.

The still, which was still found, was a capacity of 150 gallons, was discovered in a dugout located on the right fork of Bear creek, near Cotterell station, in the Boring district.

The dugout was located on the premises of Stillman Andrews and he, together with his son, Melvin Andrews, and Lester Talmadge, an adopted son, were arrested and brought to Portland at 7:30 Saturday night.

M. M. Squires accompanied the federal officers on their search for the moonshine, and was assisted in the search by several bootleggers and assisted in the search by several bootleggers.

Contents of the dugout included, besides the still, a heating stove, six barrels corn mash and one 10-gallon barrel of corn whiskey.

Andrews denied any knowledge of the still, but the federal officers reported, but they followed a trail from the hidden still to a slaughter house operated by the accused man and found a bottle of the same brand of spirits contained in the barrel.

In a barn on the place they found a dozen packages of hops and a quantity of corn mash, as a coloring for corn whiskey. There was also a blow torch and a large piece of solder, presumably being used in repairing the still.

Andrews was possibly contacted a slaughter house and sold fresh meat to farmers and settlers through a wide district in the vicinity.

Neighbors complained some time ago that Andrews and his son had sold whiskey in the neighborhood of Gresham, and frequent visits had been made to Andrews' place.

Parties confirmed their suspicions that the liquor was manufactured by him.

The agents had made two previous trips to the place, and had located the following both the right and left forks of Bear creek to their sources.

NOSES GET SCENT
Saturday afternoon they went to Mayfield station on the Astoria electric line and started up the right fork of the creek from that place.

A light breeze was blowing and when the party had proceeded about 100 yards they detected in the wind an unmistakable odor of sour mash.

The party followed the scent to the vicinity of the Andrews place and finally located the hideout in a dugout. A canvas tent was set up in the dugout and this was a clear indication of the place where the still was located.

Andrews with his son and adopted son were lodged in the county jail and the case assigned before United States Commissioner Drake, Monday morning.

Members of the sheriff's staff believe Andrews was formerly associated in the bootlegging business with J. J. Conner, recently convicted of prohibition law violations.

STORE PRICES AT CHICAGO INVESTIGATED

Inquiry Expected to Be Forerunner of Similar Investigations in Other Large Cities.

Chicago, Aug. 28.—Wholesale investigation of alleged profiteering by big retail merchandising stores here, which has been proceeding for several days, was believed tonight to be the forerunner of similar probes in other important cities.

The investigation, which was taken up by a federal grand jury here with the issuance of a subpoena for the books of Mandel Bros., big retail street department store, yesterday, was followed today by another subpoena calling on the officials of Marshall Field & Co. to produce their books.

According to United States Attorney Charles F. Clyne, some State street stores are demanding fabulous prices for wearing apparel as compared with the cost. He expected revelations of huge profits.

Clyne stated that a profit of $60 was being made on some suits of clothes and $30 on some pairs of shoes. Present Clyne is concentrating his inquiry into profiteering on wearing apparel. He expects to take up coal profiteering.

The investigation here followed an announcement several days ago by Clyne that Attorney General Palmer had been secretly investigating various articles of clothing in various parts of the country, and that as a result of the reports he had issued instructions to all United States attorneys to start an investigation.

Clyne's investigation is also expected to include profiteering in furniture and other lines. On the outcome of his inquiry may depend the rate of similar investigations planned in other cities.

Monday Clyne will question coal dealers on recent increases in retail coal prices.

He plans to ask them what justified their increase of the price of soft coal 60 cents a ton and hard coal $1.25 a ton.

QUEEN APPEALED TO FOR MACKSWINEY
Her Majesty Asked to Intercede to Save Lord Mayor Who Is Dying on Hunger Strike.

London, Aug. 28.—(U. P.)—As Terrence MacSwiney, lord mayor of Cork, lay near death from voluntary starvation in Brixton prison tonight, thousands of sympathizers anxiously awaited word from Balmoral castle, where appeal for his release was to be made to Queen Mary.

Redmond Howard, nephew of the late John Redmond, who had appealed unsuccessfully to the king, sent a message to the queen last night asking for an audience at Balmoral tonight that he might appeal to her personally for MacSwiney's release.

Appetizing food was placed before MacSwiney this afternoon in an attempt to get him to eat. He did not touch it.

MacSwiney was still conscious, but was growing steadily weaker. His wife visited him twice today.

After spending the afternoon at the prison here, she had lost power of speech and that she made no attempt to talk to him.

"It is unbearable," she cried. "The lady mayors was indignant at reports that her husband was secretly being fed. Protest by members of his family."

Redmond Howard tonight sent a message to the lord chancellor in behalf of MacSwiney urging immediate clemency to prevent British law becoming the laughing stock of the world.

Howard announced he would try to see the king very soon at Balmoral, to intercede for MacSwiney.
