AUTOIST MISTAKES FENCE FOR BRIDGE

Wreckage of concrete rail around municipal landing at Stark street, where driver crashed through with idea it was Morrison street span.

DRIVES HIS CAR THROUGH RAILING

Blurred eyesight nearly proved fatal to Elmer Moe, an iron moulder, early Sunday morning, say the police. Mistaking the approach to the municipal boat landing at the foot of Stark street for the approach to the Morrison street bridge he crashed his automobile through the iron railing and tore through the lawn for several yards before he was able to stop.

AUTO DAMAGED

The automobile was considerably damaged, but neither of the men was injured, according to the police. An automobile driven by Thomas Chakalis, 161 North Fifteenth street, at Eighty-second street and Seventeenth avenue, at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, struck Harry Westbrook. Westbrook was injured about the side of his head, one arm and ribs. He was taken to his home at Seventy-ninth street and Sixty-ninth avenue. His condition is reported not to be serious.

RANS SQUEEZING FIRES IN FORESTS, FIGHTERS RETURN

Forest fire fighters are returning to Portland with reports of either the complete or the near extinction of fires by rains of the last few days. William B. Osborne Jr. has returned from the Wenatchee where he has been superintending the fight against one of the worst fires of the season; T. H. Sherrard, supervisor of the Oregon, is expected back Monday; Carl Neil, assistant supervisor, who has been directing operations at the Camas Prairie fire, has returned; F. H. Brundage, supervisor of the Columbia, is due in Portland Wednesday.

FISH LAKE HIT HARD

The Fish lake or Potato butte fire, about three miles west of Clallie butte, on the Oregon about which reports were so meager because of the isolation of the region, burned over 300 acres, says Alan K. Moody, fire ranger, who directed the fight against the fire. Forty men were a week bringing this fire under control, and another week putting it out. The rain completely extinguished the fire.

REDE IS DIFFICULT

Because of the lake's inaccessibility, it took Portland fire-fighters three days to reach the scene. The trip included a wild night ride in an automobile from Government camp to Clackamas lake on a mountain road so narrow and so rough that the car bumped all the time, and the driver had to take the men went on foot for a day down the backbones of the Cascades.

ALASKAN OUTLOOK FOR PULP BRIGHT, SAYS FORESTER

District Forester George Cecil returned Monday from Alaska, where he had been gaining first hand information regarding the extent and quality of timber resources and the outlook for paper pulp plants in Southeastern Alaska, in company with United States Forester William B. Greeley. Greeley left for Washington from Seattle without returning to Portland.

The party, which included John D. Gouvier of the public relations department of the forest service, who remained in Alaska for a longer trip, visited Ketchikan, Petersburg, Wrangell, Haines, Juneau, Thane, Sitka, Craig and Killisnoo, inspecting national forest timber operations, visiting proposed paper pulp plants, sawmills, canneries, whaling stations, marble quarries, mining operations, ranger stations and docks, traveling on the United States forest service boat, The Tahm. They also assisted in marking two boundary posts on the international boundary between Alaska and Canada on the Stikine river.

"Colonel Greeley was greatly impressed with the area, and quality of timber in Southeastern Alaska," said Cecil, "and predicts there will be large paper and pulp plants operating in Alaska. There are already two projects, one at Fort Snetshteam, where the Alaska Pulp & Paper company have commenced preliminary construction of a plant for operations in connection with their recent purchase of 100,000,000 feet of timber from the government. The other is the Alaska-Gastineau Mining company at Thane, which has applied for a contract of 1,000,000,000 feet of pulp timber. It expects to convert its mining plant into a pulp mill. Two forest service men are now cruising the timber and other resources in connection with this project."

"The quotations from the Cox acceptance speech apparently are satisfactory to the members of the political committee, to the extent that they receive little comment. Attention is called to the Cox declaration on industrial deposits, in which he characterized as a dangerous industrial philosophy "any belief that employers could enforce their will upon workers."

COX STAYS OVER SCHEDULE IN N. Y.

New York, Aug. 30.—Governor Cox found so much to talk about with gentlemen who were anxious to discuss the situation with him that he missed his train scheduled to carry him away from New York at 8:30 Sunday night, and put in three extra hours not on the schedule.
