

CHEMIST FINDS ARSENIC TRACES IN DENTON BODY

Los Angeles, Sept. 28. — (I. N. S.)—Primary indications of poison, probably arsenic, were found today by Professor Arthur Maas after making a chemical analysis to ascertain if a death-dealing drug was used in the murder of Jacob C. Denton.

Maas discovered that parts of the body given for his analysis were in a far better state of preservation than the entire body. These parts were the stomach, one kidney and part of the liver.

The fact that these digestive organs were preserved indicated that they had received a powerful poison which acted as an embalming agency, Professor Maas stated.

Arsenic would have the effect of preventing decomposition, he said. When Denton's safe deposit box was opened by Judge R. M. Avery, administrator of the estate, it was discovered that a deed for property worth $23,000 was missing and that a valuable string of pearls had been taken and an imitation string substituted, Avery declared.

Another important development, according to the police, was the statement of the cashier of the Farmers and Merchants National bank that three checks signed by Denton were cashed early in June by Mrs. R. C. Peete, former housekeeper for Denton, now living in Denver, several days after Denton was supposed to have disappeared.

TWO DEAD IN DIVE OFF CAR TRESTLE

Two are dead and five are in St. Vincent's hospital suffering from injuries after a plunge of 75 feet from a railroad trestle belongs to the C. H. Wheeler Logging company near Cochran, Or., at 11:30 o'clock Monday morning.

The dead: Harry Lund, foreman of camp No. 2, Wheeler Logging company. P. G. Williams, switchman, Southern Pacific railroad.

The injured: Mrs. Harry Lund, Mrs. F. G. Williams, Wilda Williams, 10; Paul Williams, 13, and Maynard Williams, 11.

Driving a track speeder around a curve over a trestle, two miles from Cochran, at high speed, Harry Lund, foreman of the Wheeler Logging company, camp No. 2, risked too much in an effort to get his friends to a Portland bound train.

Williams children, Wilda, 10, Paul, 13, and Maynard, 11, are in St. Vincent's hospital.

C. H. Wheeler Jr., principal owner of the logging company, the other passenger of the speeder, leaped from it as it left the track and was the only one unharmed.

"When I leaped I hardly expected that the car would go off the trestle," said Wheeler. "I thought the railing would hold it, but as I glanced over my shoulder it toppled. I thought Lund would jump, but it seemed that the others were grasping at him, panic stricken."

"We were in a hurry to get Mr. and Mrs. Williams and children, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lund, to the Portland bound train. We hit the curve too fast."

After the speeder plunged with its seven passengers in the gulch, Wheeler ran back along the track 300 yards where he summoned a workman. The workman rushed down the mountain to the group of huddled bodies. None was dead. Wheeler hurried back to Camp No. 2, from which the party had come and returned to the trestle with a locomotive.

The injured persons were taken to Cochran, where Williams died. Lund died a few minutes later on the train enroute to Portland. Mrs. Williams and her children and Mrs. Lund were brought to Portland from Hillsboro in an ambulance.

Mrs. Williams has several fractured ribs, one eye lacerated and is injured internally. She is in a critical condition, according to hospital reports. Mrs. Lund is suffering from a fracture of the left leg and severe bruises.

Wilda Williams' left ankle is fractured and both legs badly bruised; Paul has injuries about the head, and Maynard has injuries about the face and head. It is reported that he probably has a fractured skull.

BOY TELLS STORY Maynard, in severe pain, told of the accident. He remembered all of the ride until he struck the ground, he said. He was knocked unconscious. They were going too fast, he said. The track was made for slow moving logging trains and was rough and irregular.

The Williams family had spent the week-end with the Lunds at the logging camp. They missed the train to Portland Sunday and were hurrying to make the noon train from Cochran when the accident occurred.

Oregon Students Slated University of Oregon, Eugene, Sept. 28.—The university student body was much interested in the success of Kerby Miller, class of '20, in the Rhodes scholarship contest. Following his examination Miller left for Columbia university, where he will take a year's work before going to Oxford. He took four years here, majoring in philology. According to Dean Straub he is a remarkable student and a constant reader of high class literature.

McClure to Give Chamberlain Help Through Magazine

Pendleton, Sept. 28.—Senator George E. Chamberlain is to have the support of McClure's Magazine, according to Herbert H. Kaufman, publisher and writer for the magazine, who was in Pendleton during the Round-Up. "I am a Republican," McClure told me," Kaufman said, "and the McClure publications are supporting the Republican ticket, but we will certainly make an exception to this rule, and that is in the case of Senator Chamberlain. I knew him during the war, and I knew what he did. You may quote me as saying that Oregon honors the United States when it elects George E. Chamberlain as its senator."
