

HIDES AFFECTING PRICE OF MEATS

Consumers would be getting the lowest priced beef for a number of years were it not for the fact that the price of hides is so low. The average person fails to see the connection between the price of hides and that of meat, but there is a very good one. If hides are high, then the price of meats to consumers is reduced proportionately, but if hides are cheap then the butcher must secure the higher price for his meat to make up for the deficiency. Consumers are demanding more of the roasts and soup meats than formerly. With the first touch of frost came the demand for potroasts and like cuts and this has forced these to sell proportionately higher than the better class of offerings. In fact, there is little difference in the retail shops today between the poorest cuts and the better class ones. Better market is still down and there is little likelihood of an early advance.
