

LURE OF RICHES MAKES MAN EASY FOR BUNCO PLAN

Mike Kokich, who speaks Slavonian and very little English, walked the streets of Portland Thursday morning in a hazy dream of wealth. He pictured crisp greenbacks on the cement sidewalks, in the store windows and dangling out of his pockets. He reveled in thoughts of elegant restaurants and pretty girls.

Then Thursday evening Kokich's dreams were gone and he stood in the police headquarters scratching his head, wondering where he would get the $1500 to pay his friends the money he had borrowed to give the plausible stranger who was going to make him rich.

HAIL AND WELL MET

It's a long story.

Kokich was being a good fellow in the soft drink parlors at 230 1/2 Third street Monday morning, setting up the crowd to drinks and all that.

A dark young man, who had been standing on the corner, sidled up with a pleasant smile.

"My meat is in town," he said in English, playfully tapping Kokich on the shoulder. In Slavonian, he said: "Mike, you're a man after my own heart, and a joy to your countrymen."

Kokich liked that, he wanted to be a good fellow. The young stranger and he became good friends right off. Before the day was done, the stranger whispered that he wanted to let his new friend in on a "good thing." It was a way for counterfeiting paper money.

PUTTING IT OVER

They went to the stranger's room in a hotel, and Kokich was shown the magic little box. The stranger put a bill between two pieces of paper, cut the size of the bill, and placed these between two plates on top of the little wooden box. The room was darkened, a colored liquid applied to the plates, then the stranger put his hand in the box, clicked something and there was a glow of red light. The stranger pulled the papers from between the plates and, strange to relate, there were three $5 bills instead of one. Kokich was bewildered and satisfied. This was too good to be true. The stranger said he needed a safe place to work, so they went to Kokich's home at 119 East Twenty-first street north.

Then the stranger said he had $0,000 pounds of special paper for making the bills, but it was in Mexico and he had to go after it. He said he would need $1500 to make the trip. Both men wondered how the money could be raised. The stranger, as though struck by a sudden thought, suggested that Kokich borrow it from his friends. Kokich hadn't thought of that. Well, he should do something—the stranger was doing so much for him. So Kokich got $1500 from two of his friends.

The stranger said he would make a couple more $500 bills to help out on the trip, now that he had a model. It would take longer, however, to make so much money, he said. He put the bill between the two pieces of paper, just as before, while Kokich watched with wondering eyes. Then they went down to the soft drink parlor, where they had met, to wait for the bills to be ready.

The stranger stepped into the store next door, "just for a moment," and hasn't got back since.

Kokich's friends, when he went to them in despair after waiting for hours, told him that he probably had been bunked.

When he went to the police at last the police thought probably he had been bunked also.

The stranger got to Kokich's home before Kokich, so the $500 was gone as well as the $1000.

"Now, why in the world didn't he have that bird make enough $5 bills to go to Mexico with?" said the desk sergeant at police headquarters Thursday night. He looked at the "magic box," which contained two dry batteries and a telegraph key.
