Miss Harris Is Married to Hemphill

THE event of central interest on the social calendar for Wednesday evening was the marriage of Miss Ethelwynne Harris to Allen Candee Hemphill, which was solemnized at St. Stephens pro-cathedral. The service was read in the presence of an assembly of close friends of the bridal couple, the Rev. Frederick K. Howard officiating. The bride was graduated from St. Helens hall, and has been a kindergarten teacher in that school. She is a daughter of the late Arthur R. Harris and Mrs. Harris, and has a wide circle of friends in Portland who greatly regret that her marriage will be followed by her removal from Portland to New Orleans, where her husband is engaged in business.

Miss Thelma Payne, who has been extensively feted since her return from the Olympiad, will be the guest of honor at a supper-dance given Tuesday evening by Mrs. Amanda Pfander and Mrs. Christian M. Dyrland, at the home of the former on Williams street. The dance will be given for the benefit of the former, a parody on the marriage ceremony and certificate of matrimony, an elaborate wedding breakfast and toasts in rhyme to every guest present. The musical program will be carried out in the floral decorations, place and dance cards. Miss Payne was agreeably surprised upon opening her bridal gifts to find a copy of "With All My Heart," a love song written about herself and also dedicated to her. The words and music were composed by Marion Leslie Dyrland, who will soon again entertain for Miss Payne with a musicale, at which "With All My Heart" will be sung by Mr. Hoffman. Four other selections of Mrs. Dyrland's will also be presented.

Patrons and patronesses for the masquerade dance to be given at the Auditorium by the Community Service girls Saturday night include Mayo and Mrs. Baker, Commissioner of Public Health, Mrs. John Mann, Mrs. Joseph Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Shemanski, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Andrus, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Woodward, Miss Dorothy Fox. A prize will be given for the best couple and one for the most original costume. The public is cordially invited.

Among the guests were Mrs. John Forest Dickson, Mrs. Ellsworth V. Vachon, Miss Lillian H. Moss, Mrs. Edward Hamilton Geary and Mrs. Ray W. Matson.

For the benefit of the children of the city a horse show and "calf frolic" will be staged at the Livestock exposition grounds Saturday. Everything, including the stock show, will be complimentary to children of school age. W. M. Ladd has charge of all arrangements for the event.

When Vilhjalmur Stefansson, noted Arctic explorer, who presents the opening lecture of the Portland Lyceum course Friday evening at The Auditorium, returned after five years spent in the Arctic regions, Theodore Roosevelt sent him the following characteristic note:

"There are few men in the world whom I envy, and you are one of them. Stefansson had embarked with one year's provisions. He came back five years later happy and healthy and with sledges dogs sleek and fat. He had upset all tradition of life in the polar circles. He had forced nature in spite of herself to furnish him with means of life.

Suspicion ruins peace and merriment. And at its best is most unkind. -Rusty the Fox Squirrel.

CHATTERER THE RED SQUIRREL
Facing back to the big hickory tree with all the time he was saying it, Chatterer knew it was just talk. He remembered how big Rusty had seemed when he saw him the first time that morning, and now, as he tried to picture Rusty in his mind, he grew bigger and bigger. Chatterer is no coward. His cousin Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel is much, very much bigger than he, but Chatterer does not fear him. More than once he has had the better of a quarrel with Happy Jack. But this newcomer was so much bigger than Happy Jack that Chatterer knew right down in his heart that a fight with him would be worse than foolish. Not only was Rusty big, but he was strong. Chatterer had seen that at a glance. So, despite his brave words, Chatterer was uneasy in his mind.

When he reached the hickory tree no one was to be seen. It was as quiet and peaceful there as if no living creature ever had passed that way. There wasn't a sign of Rusty the Fox Squirrel. Chatterer was both glad and disappointed. "You see, he had really expected to see Rusty. Not seeing him was a relief, yet at the same time left him just as wise as he was before and no more. Rusty might be far, far away by this time. Then again he might be right around there somewhere. So Chatterer grew more and more uneasy.

"I want to know," muttered Chatterer impatiently, as once more he looked among the dead leaves on the ground for fat hickory nuts. No one was to be found. "Someone has taken them and I want to know who it is," he continued.

"I'll fight him and drive him away," grumbled Chatterer. "That's what I'll do—I'll fight him and drive him away. I'll teach him that he can't come here and steal my hickory nuts!"

Now, this sounded very brave and bold, but all the time he was saying it, Chatterer knew it was just talk. He remembered how big Rusty had seemed when he saw him the first time that morning, and now, as he tried to picture Rusty in his mind, he grew bigger and bigger. Chatterer is no coward. His cousin Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel is much, very much bigger than he, but Chatterer does not fear him. More than once he has had the better of a quarrel with Happy Jack. But this newcomer was so much bigger than Happy Jack that Chatterer knew right down in his heart that a fight with him would be worse than foolish. Not only was Rusty big, but he was strong. Chatterer had seen that at a glance. So, despite his brave words, Chatterer was uneasy in his mind.

"It isn't any business of yours what I want to know," retorted Chatterer angrily. Without thinking he had spoken aloud.

"What is it you want to know?" demanded a voice.

Chatterer looked up to find Sammy Jay peering down at him. "It isn't any business of yours what I want to know," retorted Chatterer.

"Maybe not, maybe not," replied Sammy good naturedly. It always makes him feel good natured to see someone else ill natured. You know it works that way with some people. They actually enjoy seeing others uncomfortable. "I merely thought I might be able to help you find out what you don't seem to be able to find out for yourself. You know two heads sometimes are better than one," he added mildly.

Chatterer bit his tongue. He bit it to keep back an angry retort. You see it had popped into his head that perhaps Sammy Jay might be able to help him. Sammy Jay's eyes are sharp. There is little escapes them. No one knows this better than Chatterer the Red Squirrel. Sammy Jay's eyes twinkled.

"What you want to know," said he, "is if that big cousin of yours you boasted of having driven away really went." Chatterer looked sheepish. "Yes," said he, "that's it."
