Several carloads of blooded livestock entered at the Pacific International stock show arrived today and are housed in the big exposition building. Seven carloads of fine Holsteins are en route from Southern California and 10 carloads of Herefords and Shorthorns are expected today or Friday from Montana.

Two carloads of show horses are on the way from Denver and several strings of fancy gaited animals, high jumpers and light harness horses, already are on the ground and may be seen working out every morning and afternoon. Seats are on sale at Meier & Frank's and at the Sherman Clay music store for the night horse show, beginning Monday evening and continuing throughout the week.

To encourage the attendance of school children at the livestock show and interest the coming generation in the industry, all boys and girls will be admitted free of charge on Saturday, the opening day of the exposition. O. M. Plummer, general manager of the event, has offered medals of gold, silver and bronze for the three best essays on the stock show turned in at Pacific International headquarters by school children before December 1.

Portland Furniture Undersells Product Of Eastern Plants

Furniture prices in Portland and other Northwestern cities are considerably lower than in the East, according to speakers at a meeting of retail furniture dealers at the Portland hotel Wednesday night. The meeting at the Portland hotel was attended by about 20 local dealers and the principal speakers were John L. Young of Cleveland, Ohio, president of the Retail Furniture Dealers' association of the United States, and Douglas White of San Francisco, general manager of the Retail Furniture Dealers of California. Increased prices for labor and materials and advancing freight rates are the reasons given by Young for the high cost of furniture during the past year.
