

AMERICA PROVED UNSELFISHNESS, ASSERTS HARDING

(By Universal Service)
Brownsville, Texas, Nov. 12.—President-elect Harding avoided political issues in his Armistice day speech here.

"November the eleventh has an abiding significance to America and the world," he said. "For America it sealed our capacity to defend our national rights and stamped our effectiveness in aiding to preserve the established order of world civilization; for the world it marked a new order for power that one man's or one people's domination of the world was never designed by heaven and will never be tolerated by mankind."

"We do not claim to have won the war, but we helped mightily and recorded undying glory to American arms and gave the world a new understanding of the American spirit and a new measure of American resource. Whatever the world may have thought of us before, however incorrectly we may have been appraised, the world has come to know that selfishness is not a trait of our national character and that commercialism does not engross us."

The president-elect spoke from the parade grounds at Fort Brown. Thousands of Texans from a radius of 100 miles came to hear him. There was a pageant illustrating the history of the lower Rio Grande valley preceding the speech.

HARDING WILL NOT GO TO CAPITAL 'TIL MARCH 4

By Robert J. Bender
United News Staff Correspondent
New York, Nov. 12.—President-elect Harding, upon his return from Panama, will go directly to Marion and hold all of his pre-inauguration conferences there. He will not go to Washington before the inauguration. This is the counsel afforded him by the party leaders and will be observed. It means that Harding has postponed for the last time in his seat, although his name will be called on the senate roll until he resigns in December and his successor is appointed by the incoming Republican governor.

Senator-elect Frank Willis will be named to fill out Harding's term, which expires March 1, next, and will then begin the six-year term to which he has just been elected.

TAFT'S EXAMPLE
The reason for Harding not going to Washington before his inauguration is one involving precedent. It simply isn't done. President-elect William Howard Taft, in 1908, went to Washington some time before President Roosevelt's hour for retiring from office had arrived and simultaneously broke a precedent and strained the ties that originally bound those two men. There always are a vast number of hours around the national capital. Hence with the advent of President-elect Taft, there developed a reaction best expressed in the well-known cry, "The King is dead, long live the king."
Taft, of course, had a home and business in Washington and went down preparatory to cleaning up odds and ends about both before going into office. The resultant situation, however, proved embarrassing both to him and President Roosevelt.

There will, therefore, be nothing like that with Senator Harding. He will stay away.

THEY ALL "DID IT"
By staying away, too, he will save himself other embarrassment, it is pointed out. As always happens after a presidential campaign, the seeking hordes already are on the job. The mails to Republican national headquarters in New York, and doubtless to Harding personally, are filled with reminders that "I did it. Now what am I to get? Personally, I prefer so and so, etc." By remaining on his own front porch until he walks the planks of the White House portico, Harding will have a fair measure of protection against the office hunters. He will be able better to pick and choose between the conferences he wishes to have and those he wishes to avoid.

And, further, he will be able better to keep out of the quadrennial catch-as-catch-can staged between Washington's leading business and social representatives for the honor of being chairman of the inaugural committees. Next to the presidency, this appointment is regarded, in Washington at least, as the prize plum to be obtained in the new administration. The winner, having an incontestable and unforgivable faux pas, is generally assured a four-year season ticket to all White House social functions outside of the cabinet and diplomatic dinners and a position of social prestige for which the wife of the winning aspirant at least might well sacrifice a hand.

McLEAN NOT AFTER POST
Already the "battle of the inauguration chairmanship" has assumed vigorous proportions. For the moment it is restricted to but two main contestants, Milton E. Allen of the Riggs National bank and William T. Gallagher of the American National bank. Ranged behind each are forces that have trained their batteries both on Chairman Will Hays and President-elect Harding, for Hays and Harding are jointly burdened with the responsibility of making the selection. Actually, the appointment is made by the national chairman with the advice and consent of the president-elect.

There have been rumors recently that Edward McLean, publisher of the Washington Post and the Cincinnati Enquirer, who is with Senator Harding on his present trip, was in line for the much-sought post. More authentic authority, however, has it that McLean, the "John Alden" of Milton Allen, does not seek the job himself.

Hoover Goes Back To Job of Feeding Europe's Children

(By United News.)
Palo Alto, Cal., Nov. 12.—Herbert Hoover has gone back to work.

The former food administration head ended the vacation he has been enjoying at his home here Thursday and started for New York to resume feeding the children of Europe.

Before leaving, Mr. Hoover announced he would devote himself exclusively to raising a fund of $25,000,000, chiefly in the United States, to feed European children during the winter.

PRESIDENT WILSON TO SEEK BASIS OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE

By John Gleitsner

Washington, Nov. 12.—President Wilson will take cognizance of the trouble brewing between workers and employers in his message to the congress which meets December 6. It is understood.

The president, it was indicated, will urge legislation calculated to insure industrial peace, justice alike for labor and capital, and protection for the third party to any controversy—the public. The president considers industrial strife a matter of national concern and while he does not believe unbridled unionism should be endorsed, he favors laws which would protect the masses of the people and guarantee proper living conditions to them.

Further than this, the president wants some sort of machinery established for adjudication of labor disputes, with the object of eliminating struggles which are costly alike to the participants and to the public. He believes in the right of unions to organize and that this right should not be called into question. Labor, according to his view, is entitled to participation in decisions vitally affecting it.

The president's message will be built about these beliefs. The war between labor and capital is threatening because labor leaders profess to discern a gigantic attempt on the part of employers to destroy the effectiveness of unions, the "closed shop" and "collective bargaining." An attempt to beat down wages during the economic readjustment now in progress is feared.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor, meeting Thursday, began a discussion of how labor will fight back and resist attempts to weaken it. The strike, labor's chief weapon, will be used if conditions develop where its use is considered warranted, it was indicated.

An effort to rebuild the 24 international unions which participated in the steel strike last spring, resulting so disastrously to them, will be made Friday, when the union chiefs meet here on call of Samuel Gompers. John Fitzpatrick and William Z. Foster, leaders of the ill-fated strike, will probably not be present.
