Chatterer Sulks and Plans

honest deeds follow. Chatterer the Red Squirrel, finding that he could not frighten his big cousin, would come along and shoot him," Rusty the Fox Squirrel, away from that big hickory tree, and being too small to ashamed, very much ashamed, of himdrive him away, finally gave up scolding self. He may be a trouble maker, but and calling him bad names. It was very plain to Chatterer that Rusty had come to the Green Forest to stay. You see right down in his heart Chatterer was selfish. Yes, sir, Chatterer was selfish. Now, of course, the wise thing for him to have done would have been to get busy at once and make sure of his share of those fat hickory nuts. But Chatterer is much like some foolish and selfish people I know, who if they can-not have all of a thing won't take any. He wasn't quite as bad as that, but was very nearly. He did pick up a few fat lickory nuts and take them to one of his secret storehouses. But he spent far ore time sulking and planning. Right down inside Chatterer knew hat Rusty had just as much right to those fat hickory nuts as he had, but he wouldn't admit it even to himself. There were more of those fat hickory nuts than Chatterer could eat in two vinters, and he knew it. But he wanted all of them. That was because he was selfish. So every time he saw Rusty carry off a nut to hide he said to himself, "That is my nut," and then grew more sulky than ever. So instead of picking up and carrying away fat hickory nuts as fast as he could he went off by himself and sulked. He was so much more nimble and spry than Rusty that he could have stored away many more of those fat hickory nuts in a day than could Rusty. But he didn't do it. He simply sulked and tried to think of some way to get the best of

So Rusty worked and Chatterer sulked. and the Merry Little Breezes shook down the fat hickory nuts from the top of the tree. And in Chatterer's head thoughts were busy trying to find some plan for what Chatterer was pleased to call getting even with Rusty the Fox "I might go and get Happy Jack the Gray Squirrel, and between us I guess we could drive that fellow away," muttered Chatterer. But that plan didn't suit him. You see, if he did that Happy Jack would want a share of those fat

"I'll watch him and find out where he stores those nuts. Then when he isn't about I'll take them for myself," thought he. "It will be a lot easier than hunting about among the leaves on the ground for them, and I'll get all of them, after all." Chatterer fairly hugged himself at
