'Chu Chin Chow' Is Spectacle Of Beauty

THE beauty of music, of song, of art—the beauty of everything splendidly done upon the basis of a conception imaginatively extravagant—this is the combination that made of "Chu Chin Chow" a spectacle the like of which no Portland audience has seen, and leaves today a memory of a living fairy tale in the colors of dream.

"Chu Chin Chow" came to the Helleg theatre on the eve of the holiday with heralds who promised us much of beauty, and the best tribute that may be paid to it today is that its heralds are timid folk who have not the words to tell of the grandeur of its setting, the charm of its personnel and the interest of its story.

A tracing kaleidoscope of brilliance could lend no color to the myriads of the fantastic affair, built upon the story of Ali Baba and the forty thieves of old Baghdad, with such embellishments as a poem of entertainment for which Portland, long aggrieved with the shoddy, half-staged, half-hearted horrors of girls and music about a stage, long ago. It may be a hackneyed thought, but to say that there is no dull moment in "Chu Chin Chow" is only half truth, for there is so much of it that it must race all too swiftly to complete its course in the more than three hours that are allotted to it—hours that pass as the minutes we spend among the forest glens.

In "Chu Chin Chow" there are three outstanding figures, in a dramatic sense. They are Marjorie Wood as Zahret, the desert woman, who is the soul of the masquerading band; Henry Latimer as Abu Hasan, the robber shiek, alias Chu Chin Chow of Shanghai, and Don W. Ferrandus as Baba, the bogus of Baghdad. It would be manifestly unfair to thus belittle the abilities of Roy Cropper as Nur-al-Huda, the son of Ali, and his sister Marjanah, the singing slave girl, who is Elsie's betrothed.

Marjorie Wood has a role that tests her metal and finds it ringing so actually true that her drama leaves one thoroughly satisfied to the very end. This passionate, crafty desert beauty, Miss Wood parades her achievement through rapidly succeeding scenes that nothing short of magnificent—parricides, a wedding, a murder, a flight, that sees the cold steel of her knife seeking the fiendish heart of Chu Chin Chow. All Baba, portrayed with a fealty that must be praised, is the ragged babbler whose singing voice makes melody of every word and compares admirably with the charm of the songs of Nur-al-Huda, who makes efforts only forth an interruption while he sings on in response to the welcome he receives. There is captivating sweetness about Marjanah, too, and her songs are a pretty echo to the tones of her lover. Aside from these voices, merit must be accorded those of Chu Chin Chow and of Nur-al-Huda, whose efforts are the most realistic of the many.

In the chorus here is nothing to quite equal the rendition of "The Song of the Scentator" by Chu Chin Chow and his forty thieves—a melody of power. For artistic beauty, no scene of the play has the effect of the final act, where the love of Ali Baba and Aliocam, Kasim's wife, who is Adelaide Messmer, finds expression. For spectacular portions and utter grandeur, quite compares with the brilliant fashion show of the mannequins, whose creations pass in such a prompt array of colors and textures that it is almost difficult to register what the eye sees.

There is a seemingly setting for the slave market scene that stands out among the many, too, and there is reality about the whole big production.

Welsh Tenor Will Be One of Principals In Opera Production

John Trehame, the Welsh tenor, who is to sing the role of Don Alvaro in Verdi's opera "The Force of Destiny" at the Auditorium on the nights of Friday and Saturday, December 3 and 4, has the Caruso type of voice and style of delivery and tremendous interest in the part, for this is his initial public appearance here.

Trehame received his musical and operatic training in Cardiff, London and Montreal, and came to the Pacific coast as a soloist for a Welsh singing festival. He came to Portland a few weeks ago to make his home, attracted by the city's musical advancement. Trehame's artistic and operatic training, "brought down the house" Tuesday when they appeared in a duet from "The Force of Destiny" at the luncheon meeting of the Rotary when opera was the topic of the speakers.

FRATERNAL

Washington Council, No. 3, Royal and Soberlone, conferred degrees Wednesday, beginning at 5:30. Illustrious Master James E. Martin presided. The entire council then made a visit to Multnomah hall at the Pythian building, where under direction of Illustrious Master Robert C. Bell, the super-excellent degree was conferred upon over 100 candidates in the presence of many members and prominent Masons. The R. and S. Masters is a fraternity within the Masons the degrees of which are given only to those who have attained the degrees given by the Royal Arch chapter.

Many members and visitors enjoyed the lecture before Mt. Tabor lodge, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, Wednesday evening at the Pythian building given by the Rev. R. H. Sawyer. Degree work was given in the afternoon session. After the lecture refreshments were served to more than 40 guests assembled in the banquet room.

Samaritan lodge, I. O. O. F., Wednesday evening conferred the degree of brotherly love upon a class of five candidates, one of whom was from Clatskanie. The committee on the new temple reported progress in the formation of a building for the temple, which expressed hope that another year would see a modern Odd Fellows' temple in Portland.

Cosmopolitan lodge, Knights of Pythias, Wednesday night in the Pythian building, gave a short literary and musical program under direction of H. Friedlander after which dancing was the order of the evening.

Portland Lodge, Royal Order of Moose, Wednesday evening had a large attendance of members, families and friends at its temple on Fourth street. There was a movie screen series, special concert by the Moose Band, a vaudeville program and dancing.

Portland Star Homestead, Brotherhood of American Yocems, Thursday evening will have a serpentine dance with a number of special features and attractions to which all members and friends are invited. The large hall at 357 Commercial street at 257 Thirteenth street has been engaged and plenty of fun is assured all who enter the doors.

A reality enhanced by the great cameo that ambles across the stage to the music of an orchestra of ten, where lovers find the riches they desire as tragedy, comedy, riches, poverty, avarice, charity and rags and royal robes make up a pompous and grotesque charade. If there is a weak spot in the entire production, it is the overdrawn role of Kasim Baba, the mean miser of Baghdad, whose greed he follows his dream, enacted perhaps truthfully, by Albert Howson.

Fortunately, "Chu Chin Chow" will remain until Saturday night, with matinee today and Saturday.

Housewives Sew for Nursery Tots

Walthall Returning To Portland With a Brand New Offering

Henry B. Walthall, who has returned to the legitimate stage after winning fame in the silent drama, and who was seen at The Auditorium last Sunday night, is to reappear at the Helleg theatre on Friday and Saturday of next week, December 3 and 4.

For this special engagement Walthall will present a new comedy drama by Herbert Bashford, entitled "Would You?" This captivating play of modern life, according to advance reports, is described as a sermon crystallized into a laugh.

Have You Seen Those Cantilever Shoes For Women?

They look just like ordinary smart walking boots or oxfords. But they are made to prevent and correct foot troubles.

Flexible and comfortable as a moccasin—yet snug and smooth-fitting like a soft kid glove. You HAVE to walk correctly in them without thinking about it—for they're built so you can't help it!
