He saw Farmer Brown's boy hide the hunter's gun and then turn back toward the tree in which poor Rusty the Fox Squirrel had hidden Chatterer guessed just what Farmer Brown's boy was going to do.

"He is going back to see just how badly Rusty was hurt by that hunter with the terrible gun," thought Chatterer. "If Rusty isn't much hurt he probably has left that hole by this time, but if he is much hurt Farmer Brown's boy will find him in that hole and will try to do something for him. Rusty doesn't know it, but he was mighty lucky to have Farmer Brown's boy happen along just when he did. If anything can be done for Rusty it will be done by Farmer Brown's boy." You see, Chatterer knows Farmer Brown's boy. He has known him for a long time. He knows that he is the best friend the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows have. As he silently followed Farmer Brown's boy back through the Green Forest he remembered how Farmer Brown's boy had found Bobby Coon with a broken leg and had taken him home and taken care of him, and when that leg had been set and had grown strong had set Bobby free. He remembered how Mrs. Grouse had been found nearly starved to death under the loy crust that had formed in the night while she was asleep buried in cared for until she was quite herself Chatterer had no fear for his big cousin Rusty the Fox Squirrel. Silently Chatterer followed Farmer Brown's boy back to the tree where Rusty had been shot. He saw Farmer Brown's boy climb the tree until he reached the hole high up. He saw him take an old glove from his pocket and slip it on one hand. He saw him put Rusty. If he isn't too badly hurt Farmer that hand in the hole and take out Rusty Brown's boy will make him well." and he saw the look of pity in the eyes of Farmer Brown's boy as he gently ex-
