Boy, 14, Starts for 'Movie Capital,' but Plans Get Big Jolt

The spirit of high adventure stirred the veins of Samuel Katz, 14-year-old pupil at the Clinton Kelly school, Portland and its wealth of resources for Boyville palled upon young Katz, and he dreamed of fame through the moving picture route. The fascinations of the studios of Hollywood, Culver City and Universal City held him in their thrall until he bid school principal and school comrades farewell and departed in the quest.

But this plan of Sam's disarranged others that had been made for him by his brother, Frank Katz, 31 East Thirtieth street, with whom the lad has been living while going to school here. The parents of the Katz brothers live in New York, and it had been planned to send the boy back to them for the holidays.

When he disappeared the police and outside towns were notified, and he was picked up about 40 miles south of Portland as he was sturdily trudging in the direction of Los Angeles, the movie capital. Back he came, and today Samuel Katz is a railroad passenger to New York.

Eight gallons of moonshine whiskey and 225 gallons of mash, together with a crude still in which a washbottle and pieces of an old eaves trough were used, were captured when a squad of deputy sheriffs raided the farm of Jim Gust, back of Council Crest, Tuesday. The sheriff's officers say that in all their experience with illicit stills they have never found one that was so unsanitary, nor conditions so filthy, the mash itself containing spoiled fruit and other refuse, being practically a mass of garbage. Gust was taken to the county jail.
