

AMENDMENT TO RESTRICT PARKING RIGHTS IS READY

Abuses of Leeway Allowed For Hire Cars and Taxicabs Prompts Proposed Change in City Laws.

Amendment to the ordinance governing the parking of taxicabs and for hire cars in the congested business district, to better regulate that traffic and put a stop to the abuse of privileges already granted the public conveyances by the city, will be ready for passage by the city council next Wednesday, city officials stated yesterday.

In the congested district at present many blocks are crowded along the curb lines from street to street by taxicabs and for hire cars, making it impossible for shoppers to drive up to the store entrances, according to Autobus Inspector Ray Gill, and the downtown merchants have asked relief from that condition.

HULES ARE IGNORED

Taxicab companies have been licensed to stand one machine in front of each hotel and have been granted similar concessions elsewhere; for hire autos have also been given certain space to park while waiting for patrons. In both instances the city's concessions have been greatly abused to the exclusion of private machines, along the curb.

Taxicabs have been lining up along the curb awaiting their turn to take the licensed stand, thus blocking the curb lines. For hire car drivers, taking advantage of the privilege accorded every citizen to park in front of a store for 30 minutes, have been scattering machines throughout the congested district. These drivers will remove their for hire signs until a fare is secured, then replace the sign and drive away.

CHANGES URGED

Captain Lewis of the police traffic squad has urged the amended ordinance to better regulate the public vehicle drivers.

Under the revised ordinance a taxicab company will be allowed to stand only one taxicab in front of the hotels, and for hire cars will be allowed to stand only at the place designated by the license when issued by Inspector Gill. Should a taxicab or for hire vehicle be found parking elsewhere than the space designated by the license that license will be revoked, whether a for hire sign is displayed or not. All public vehicles, however, will be allowed to stand before a store for 30 minutes while a fare is shopping inside the building.

Hardings Good Companions Next First Lady Gracious

Senator Warren G. Harding, as president of the United States, will come as near doing the right thing, the average American thing, in his official and private life in the White House, as is in his power to do.

Meanwhile, every glory that attends the exalted position every function available to the position, every novelty that the leader of the nation's affairs is capable of experiencing, will be indulged in by the president and his clever and capable wife.

These are outstanding features of the impressions of the new executive family gleaned by Mrs. C. S. Jackson during her voyage on the same ship that carried the Harding party to the Panama canal zone.

ON BOAT WITH HARDINGS

Mrs. Jackson, accompanied by Mrs. E. C. Ransom of Portland and Mrs. Margaret Cowen of Washington, D. C., sailed from New Orleans to the zone aboard the United Fruit company steamer Parolina on November 18. The same craft carried the Harding party of many members and a limited number of other voyagers. The trip was a delight from the hour of the Harding farewell greeting at the wharf in New Orleans until Mrs. Jackson and her friends left the Harding group at the canal zone for the return voyage to New Orleans aboard the same company's steamer Pastores. The Hardings remained longer in the canal zone.

Especially was Mrs. Jackson impressed by Mrs. Harding. The future first lady of the land is a gracious, hospitable woman of much charm and typically American, as is her husband, according to Mrs. Jackson's estimate.

MEETS MRS. HARDING

In a companionship the first day out Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Harding met. The latter was the first to speak and her greeting was a cordial bit of fellowship from one American to another. Later a formal introduction gave the travelers many pleasant moments together. Incidentally, the formal presentation was made by Miles McCahill, a secret service operative and friend of both the Hardings and the Jacksons. McCahill formerly lived in Portland.

"I like people and I want to be friends with everybody in America," Mrs. Harding told Mrs. Jackson in one of their chats aboard the Parolina. "I felt the moment I had met Mrs. Harding that the ceremony of the inaugural ball would be resumed with the advent of the Hardings in the White House."

HELPED HUSBAND

"The Hardings, like all average American people, have long had the popular conception of official life at Washington. They have for years pictured life in the White House, just as every other person who reads has done. Now that they are actually to occupy that high rank in American affairs they will indulge in every delight, every ceremony, every comfort and every luxury the position offers. When the president retires he and Mrs. Harding may well say, I feel sure, that they have seen the presidency and its life from beginning to end."

Mrs. Jackson is confident that Senator Harding will agree with her appraisal that much of his success is due to his wife's influence. That he has been a splendid success there is none to deny, and a measure of the responsibility for his advances goes to Mrs. Harding, who is characterized by Mrs. Jackson as a high strung, clever woman.

The senator himself is a four-square citizen to whom Mrs. Jackson feels she can pay no greater tribute than to say that he will do as nearly right as the nation's chief as he knows how.

WAS GALA AFFAIR

The entire voyage, from its inception at New Orleans, until its culmination, was a pleasure and a delight, Mrs. Jackson reports. The farewell to the Harding party was a gala affair of music and cheering. The ship was regaled in fine shape for the reception of the next president. Everything aboard had been renovated, every time had been repainted and every piece of metal had been polished. It is said $10,000 was spent on new silver service and $7000 on new linen.

In that setting was served, on the final evening of the voyage, the captain's dinner. At the dinner, as throughout the voyage, the senator was the suave, cultured, average American he has been pictured. He is a good mixer, a splendid conversationalist, and an agreeable playfellow, ever willing to join in the sport of the moment with an abandon that seemed only to be dampened by the constant presence of a battery of motion picture cameras that spoiled his game of shuffle-board repeatedly.

GIVES WORD PICTURE

The senator, for the edification of those who must know what he looks like, is an image of the composite of George L. Baker and the late Edward Holtman, Mrs. Jackson declares. If one may imagine the blended faces of these two Portland citizens—the semi-Latin countenance of the mayor and the fine, elderly features of Holtman, one has a perfect likeness of the next president.

IMPRESSED BY CANAL

Other pleasant companions on the voyage were Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Scooby and Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Creagen, all of Brownsville, Texas, who were hosts to the Hardings prior to the canal trip.

"I was proud to be an American when I saw the Panama canal," Mrs. Jackson says. "That is one of the grandest bits of beauty and magnificence an American may see and the sight of the great undertaking and a consideration of the magnitude of America's task in building and maintaining the great water way is thrilling beyond the power of words to express."

SANITARY SURVEY OF RESTAURANTS BEING CONSIDERED

Campaign Launched With Ultimate Aim of Improving Standards of Certain Eating Houses.

Chief Lang of the sanitary department of the city health bureau is completing a survey of Portland's restaurants for the purpose of properly classifying them as to the cleanliness and general sanitary conditions of each place. Following the sanitary department's complete check of the city's eating places the public will be advised of the fitness or cleanliness of each.

As a basis of standards the sanitary department classifies a 90-point restaurant as excellent, 82½ to 90 good, 77½ clear, 70 fair, 62½ poor and all restaurants ranking under 70 points will be slated for the revocation of their licenses by the city council, Lang stated.

MANY "POOR" ONES

The inspection has developed very few 90-point restaurants; only a nominal number of the next class, many of only fair condition and a vast number of the poor classification, indicating decidedly unclean and insanitary conditions, though still within the specifications of the health bureau.

Commissioner of Public Utilities Mann has announced that he will at once look into the matter of compelling every restaurant owner to keep posted in plain view of all patrons a report from the health department on the condition of the kitchen and premises of the place.

PUBLIC SHOULD KNOW

"The public is entitled to know what sort of place it is patronizing and the cleanliness or filthiness of the kitchen in which their food is prepared," Mann said.

Heretofore the sanitary department has issued a certificate to those restaurants and cafes ranking excellent in general sanitary conditions, and these have been proudly displayed by the cafe men. Hereafter it is the intention of the sanitary department to compel the restaurant men holding certificates of which they are not overly proud to display their certificates.

Thinks Lost Aviators Are Alive

New York, Dec. 25.—(U. P.)—A telegram received at the Rockaway naval air station from Lieutenant A. W. Evans in Ottawa expressed confidence that the three aviators missing since December 13 in a naval balloon will be found. Evans did not state upon what he based his optimism.
