

MANY SAWMILLS CLOSED IN COOS; CAMPS ARE IDLE

Marshfield, Or., Jan. 13.—Prospects for men employed in the mills and camps of Coos county and for the employers as well are not bright at present, as many of the larger plants are closed down. A general feeling prevails that spring will bring new business, resulting in operations on a large scale, but for a time, at least, work in the lumber industry in this part of the state will be slack.

The C. A. Smith mills, in Marshfield, which were closed for the holidays, will remain shut down until the first of February and probably until February 15. The camps of the Smith-Powers company will remain closed. The company operates seven camps.

The big mill of the North Bend Mill & Lumber company and the camp operated by the company are both closed and will not open until February 1.

The Buehner Lumber company has gone on a six-hour shift, paying at the rate of 50 cents an hour for common labor.

The mill of the Moore Mill & Lumber company at Bandon has remained closed since the holidays and will not open before some time in February.

The plant of the Bay Park Lumber company at North Bend is closed for repairs, but the management hopes to open soon.

With the launching of the last vessel in December, the Kruse & Banks shipyard is without work, except barges being built for the port of Coos Bay. The company has no new orders for vessels.

The Johnson mill at Reedsport is operating, but the Reedsport Lumber company and the Winchester Bay Lumber company plants are both closed.

Many of the men who were employed in the camps and mills have gone away to other places, but others are idle, waiting for the companies to resume operations.

The mills connected with the Four L's, which include most of the larger plants, have agreed on a minimum wage for common labor of $4 a day. This will be followed by practically all of the mill companies in this country.

At present less work for the employees of the lumber industry exists than at any time for four years, but lumbermen and employees are hopeful that the conditions will not continue for any great length of time.

Snow 9 1/2 Feet Deep at Crater Lake

Medford, Jan. 13.—Superintendent Alex Sparrow of Crater National park reports nine and one half feet of snow at Crater lake and eight and one half at Anna Spring camp, five miles lower, which is four feet more than at this time last winter.

Brookings Almost Deserted Because Of Mill Shutdown

Marshfield, Or., Jan. 13.—Until recently the biggest center of population in Curry county and one of the busy points on the Oregon coast, the town of Brookings is becoming a deserted village. The big mill of the C. & O. Lumber company has been shut down. The management has announced that the suspension of operations may continue 30 or 60 days, but promises that the mill will run again within three months. Repair work is offered men of families desiring to remain. Most of the unmarried men are leaving and many are moving to the hills of Curry county, where they will occupy cabins and stay in the woods for the rest of the winter. The closing of the mill throws many out of employment and practically closed the town temporarily.

Doctor Bound Over For Narcotic Sale

Dr. L. R. Purkey, osteopathic physician in the Morgan building, who is charged with supplying a drug addict with narcotics, waived his rights to a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner Fraser Wednesday and was held to the federal grand jury under $1000 bonds. Dr. Purkey was arrested last week by internal revenue officers a few minutes after he is alleged to have made a sale to a drug addict. Marked money is said to have been found in his possession.

Phone Line Tapped; Moonshiners Tipped On Proposed Raid

Goldendale, Wash., Jan. 13.—Tapping a telephone line enabled moonshiners, alleged to be operating a large still in a deserted cabin on Bowma creek, in an isolated section of the Simcoe mountains about 20 miles from Goldendale, to gain word of an impending raid and flee. While plans for the raid were being made local authorities were notified that a mysterious message had been going over the wires of a rural line out through the Simcoe mountains from Goldendale.

"Get that dead horse away from the road quick, the officers are making an awful fuss about it," is said to be the code signal that was heard in a feminine voice, apparently from nobody to nowhere. When the authorities arrived at the cabin evidences of a hasty departure by the occupants were plain and everything indicated that a moonshine plant had been in full operation shortly before, but the still had been dismantled and removed. Three empty mash barrels were found in the left of the building and a quantity of corn mash was found outside the cabin, where it had evidently been hastily covered with dirt.

The "cut in" on the telephone line was found to have been made by running a wire into the end of a large tin can with a piece of rawhide stretched tightly over one end, making a drum-head transmitter over which all conversations that passed over the line could be plainly heard.

Walla Walla, Wash., Jan. 13.—During 1920 the rainfall at the intake of the Walla Walla city waterworks on Mill creek, in the Blue mountains, 15 miles from the city, was 49.28 inches, nearly three times the normal yearly rainfall in the Walla Walla valley and the greatest amount recorded since the weather bureau began to take records, five years ago.
