As to the future of foreign exchange, the First Federal Foreign Banking association holds out little hope of an early return to normal other than sterling, and even with regard to sterling it is possible that Englishmen may come to regard the working parity of the pound as equivalent to $4.

The pound sterling may come back to a gold parity, says the bank, "but it is possible that Englishmen may prefer to give it a new value of about one pound to $4. It will really make little difference, if business becomes adjusted to that value. Money is only a medium of exchange. There admittedly is an element of national pride involved, and perhaps of international prestige in finance, that is interesting Britain to bring the pound back to its old value."
